Even though their daily school routine was basically the same, students added variety - and surprises - to their lives outside of school.

Those who provided the Knight Surprises were the students and faculty, a diverse group which created an out-of-the ordinary year.

Students were given a surprise by Lincoln Public Schools when six class periods became required, rather than five. The wide variety of classes gave students many options in filling their new requirement.

Many students took the opportunity to join one or more different clubs. These groups of students with common interests sometimes took part in some uncommon activities. This section is a survey of some of those activities.

The conditioning and psyching up that athletes went through to prepare for their events were as expected, but their efforts sometimes produced some unexpected results.

Hoping to influence the spending of high school students, many local businesses bought advertising space. Students, however, added little surprises by buying space of their own.

Still the Same...

The physical changes that have been so predominant over the years are gone - there was no new building or new parking lot this year. There was no obvious change that affected our lives this year, but changes did take place.

Maybe it was the simple change for sophomores to go from junior high to a much larger high school.

Although some sophomores were overwhelmed by being lost in the crowd, others enjoyed it.

"I like Southeast because I don't know anybody, so I don't have to say, 'Hi' in the halls," admitted sophomore Kipper Hesse.

For juniors and seniors though, Southeast was "old hat". The biggest physical surprise they received was the two new sidewalks in the south courtyard.

"The new sidewalks are great," said junior Anita Sawyer, "Your moccasins don't get soaked."

But Southeast had other surprises. Some changed the lives of many, in ways we didn't expect.

We were shocked and saddened by the death of Mike Hansen a week before school started. Through the help of senior Scott Wright and teacher Mike Ware, however, we have all been made aware of the value of life. Many of us who were at one time "inconvenienced" by the mandatory seatbelt law, now are surprised to find ourselves buckling up, as if our life depended on it, which is truly the case.

A surprise and honor came to Southeast when the PSAT test scores came back. As a school, we had the most students in the state to place highly. There were nine students who received a honorable mention of commendation,

But Full of Surprises!

12 students who were National Merit Semi-Finalists, and, most impressive of all, we had senior Matt Wigdall, who placed highest in the state.

The surprise that really shocked many and made us once again believe miracles did happen - the semester break Ski trip was not cancelled!!!

Southeast was not the only place surprises took place this year. Many surprising things happened throughout Lincoln and Nebraska.

One day early fall, two trains collided in south Lincoln while both were on the same track.

Two women were chosen to run for governor, which is a first for the state of Nebraska and the nation.

A freak hailstorm bombarded Omaha

during mid-September leaving them with one foot of hail.

President Ronald Reagan appeared in Omaha on behalf of gubernatorial candidate Kay Orr, and the Lincoln High band was chosen to play before him. Then they were told they couldn't. Then they were told they could. It ended up they didn't play because of a school policy prohibiting groups from performing for political purposes.

This year we've come to appreciate the fact that we don't always need some sort of surprising change to make life entertaining. We can take each day as a surprise and joy simply for what we've learned and accomplished for that day.

For the Knights are full of surprises.

Students' activities go beyond usual

Southeast in 1986-87 had all of the usual things you would expect: classes, activities, and typical high school pastimes. We went to sports events with our friends, had parties on weekends, and studied for tests.

All fairly normal. But what was different from the traditional conception of high school was the people and what they did. How we entertained ourselves and occupied our time made us unique. And at times a bit surprising.

A common way to spend time, and make money while you did it, was by working. Many Southeast students had jobs that took up time after school and on weekends.

Being a D.J. on a popular radio station, KFRX, was senior Mike Dahm's way of accomplishing these goals in an interesting way. Known as "Paul Anthony" to his airwave groupies, Dahm worked the untraditional hours of 2 to 6 a.m. Sunday and Monday mornings.

"It's not uncommon for me to have a 24-hour stretch of being awake. Once when I worked, went to a concert, and worked again, I was up for 36 hours. I was cracking some pretty funny jokes by the end of my program," he said.

Another way people were active in their non-classroom time was through sports. Whether it was a school team, intramurals, or a community sports team, many of us devoted as much (or more) time to sports as to our schoolwork.

Senior Jim Poggemeyer was one of many students that took his athletics to high levels. Poggemeyer qualified for a water-skiing team in Wisconsin.

"When you're rocking with a wave, barefoot, at 30 or 40 m.p.h., you get a completely original feeling," he said. "It's the ultimate."

Hobbies were an additional way students chose to have fun. Oftentimes clubs at school existed in a particular area of interest. Others pursued hobbies with friends or alone.

Sheep are senior Jennifer Scott's passion. She has worked with sheep for nine years. After feeding and taking care of them at home on her acreage, Scott entered her sheep in contests, like fairs and other shows, where she has won her share of awards.

"This year I have a show in Kansas City, where I'll be four days, and one in Denver. I miss a week of school for that one," she said. "It's a lot of fun."

Be it through a hobby, sport, job, or other activity, we found some pretty interesting ways to keep busy. Friends and pastimes made our lives fun and interesting. If you took a look around the halls, you were bound to be surprised.

Variety spices life

Summer and fun go hand-in-hand. Since there were no more tests to study for or papers to write, students were able to break loose and have fun.

Many students traveled as a way to enjoy the summer life. Senior Shelley Smith went to Mexico City with her church youth group to help the people recover from the tremendous earthquake they had encountered. "It was good for me to see what the Mexicans went through and what they are experiencing now as a result," Smith said.

Younglife, a youth group that is not school-affiliated, held a camp called "Frontier" near Buena Vista, Colo. Senior Shannon Toolson attended Frontier along with about 80 other Lincoln kids. The camp lasted a week, and Toolson said they kept busy "four-wheelin'", horse-back riding, and mountain climbing. "It's definitely something I'll never forget," said Toolson.

Some students really broke loose and went overseas to the Far East. Senior Bart Sidles and junior Jamie McClelland were two of 26 students chosen as ambassadors by People to People, a national organization. "It was so incredible standing on the Great Wall and realizing that I was halfway around the world," said Sidles.

Here in the United States, the Statue of Liberty's restoration and 100th birthday were celebrated with a multi-million dollar extravaganza. The "new lady" was greeted by the world's largest armada and with a spectacular array of fireworks. The Fourth of July weekend revealed America's true spirit of freedom.

Those who stayed here in Lincoln experienced many days of cool, wet weather. Despite this minor setback, students still made the most of summer.

While some enjoyed a relaxed summer, others were making the most of the ever-popular summer clinics. Steve Strong, senior, said that he improved his blocking techniques at a football clinic in Tulsa, Okla.

At a clinic for drill teams at UNL, junior Aisa Miller said, "I learned how important it was to go the extra mile and to smile in extreme pain."

Students get ready

As summer vacation came to an end, students were face-to-face with the beginning of another school year. Some faced it with ease, whereas others had a more difficult time making the transition.

Sophomores were typically thought to have difficulty on the first day, which was true for some to a certain extent.

"She was scared," sophomore Janelle Dietz said about sophomore Rochelle Blumanoorst.

"No, I wasn't! SHE was scared," Blumanoorst giggled, slapping her hand over Dietz's mouth.

Being new in high school, however, wasn't traumatic for all sophomores all the time.

"I never thought that much about it," sophomore Jennifer Beary said, "It wasn't that hard."

There were certain feelings that upperclassmen and sophomores alike shared about the beginning of school.

It meant getting up early. "You have to get back in the routine of school...ugh," senior Tony Loth said.

And, it meant work. "I began to look forward to weekends again," said senior Chris Coleman.

On the other hand, some students had a positive outlook on the start of school. Junior Lisa Bell said she had looked forward to seeing her friends again, going to weekend parties, and going to school events such as dances and football games.

Before students had to face the actual start of school, though, they had to prepare for it. Many sports, spirit, and music groups began holding practices weeks before school started, and students later came to school to sign up for lockers.

Sophomores, though they were last to get their lockers, were given first-class treatment during Sophomore Orientation, a few days before school started. They were given information about clubs and a tour of the school. At the end of Orientation, a pep rally was held to welcome them into high school.

Another pep rally, for fall sports, was held once school was started.

"It was neat," sophomore Katherine Audi said, "I like watching the people to see what they do." She added that it was a good way to get out of class, too.

Game draws crowd

Moons and stars of gold and silver foil paper shone as students past and present entered the North Gym for "One Shining Knight" of tradition.

"Since the theme was 'night' we decided to decorate the gym in metallics," said Junior Mindy Berry, Pep Club vice-president.

Early in the evening, the Homecoming festivities began on the sideline of Seacrest Field as Court Choir sang the national anthem.

The crowd turned to the flag pole as they sang along, but there was no flag. One Northeast fan in the stands quipped, "It must be due to budget cuts."

Usually stored in the pressbox, the flag could not be found when band director Bob Krueger asked some band members to raise it.

About 60 band alumni joined the marching band in playing the fight song at the end of the pre-game show, and they performed on the field with the band at half time.

As the clock was running out on half time, the Homecoming royalty candidates were quickly presented on the field.

"It was really scary to me," Homecoming Queen Ginny Wood said, "It was something that I'd only want to do once."

In the second half of the game, the football team scored more than in the first half, giving the wildly cheering crowd a victory of 28-7 over the Northeast Rockets.

Around 10:00, students and alumni began filtering into the gold- and silver-decorated North Gym as recorded music blared from Complete Music's sound system.

Halfway through the dance, a red carpet was rolled out as the Homecoming royalty were announced from fourth runners-up to the king and queen.

"When they said my name, I thought they said someone else's name," Nun said, "I just thought 'Oh well, at least I was elected a candidate.'"

Issues draw interest

Whether it was by working, volunteering, or attending a Nebraska football game, community involvement played an important role in students' lives.

Citizenship Issues, a senior requirement, was a key factor in getting students working in the community. In order to graduate, seniors had to put in 20 hours of volunteer time in some organization.

"When you volunteer, you learn more about your community and you realize how many programs are available to you as a citizen," said senior Heather Horacek, who volunteered as a Red Cross swim teacher.

The November elections offered a good chance for students to volunteer during campaigning. Some chose to volunteer to fill their Civ Issues requirement, while others did it just for the learning experience.

Senior Rachelle Becker began volunteering for the Helen Bosalls campaign last summer. As campaign time got closer, she was promoted to Student Coordinator for Southeast, which made her in charge of getting volunteers to put up yard signs and hand out stickers during football games.

A campaign of another kind was started by senior Scott Wright and Civ Issues teacher Mike Ware after a car accident killed Wright's best friend, Mike Hansen, last summer.

Hansen, who would have been a senior this year, was thrown from the car when it rolled over, because he was not wearing a seatbelt. As a result of this, Wright and Ware started campaigning the importance of seatbelts.

The two have been involved in such activities as talking to classes, taking polls to see how many people wear seatbelts and working against the repeal of the safety belt law. Wright is also on Mayor Roland Luedtke's Teenage Safety Belt Task Force.

"The most effective way of getting people to wear their seatbelts is probably the saddest, and that is to experience the death of someone close to you," said Ware.

One of the more entertaining ways of getting involved in the community was to attend the NU football games. On football Saturdays, the third most populated "city" in Nebraska is Memorial Stadium.

Money tops grades

Money. Oftentimes it leads to cars, tapes, clothes and food. How it was obtained ranged from parental hand-outs to getting a job and earning it.

Students held down a wide variety of jobs, including jobs such as babysitting, yard work, secretarial work and modeling. Senior Kelli Dorn worked as a salesperson and model at Seiferts downtown.

"It's fun to coordinate outfits for customers and set up displays," said Dorn. "Sometimes we model for the store at Hovland's and Brittany's, too."

A common job among students was working at fast food and sit-down restaurants. Senior Steve Kruse had an assortment of responsibilities with his job at Mistry's Edgewood.

"Most of the time I washed dishes although sometimes I cooked french fries or wrapped baked potatoes," said Kruse.

Junior Steve Hoxie was a waiter at Eastmont Towers retirement home. Along with waitering, his job consisted of cleaning the kitchen and dining room and setting up food trays for people who couldn't go to the restaurant to eat.

"I like the wages and the hours. The people are really nice too," said Hoxie.

Some jobs had potential for leading to future careers. Jill Briggs, senior, worked as a secretary and filing clerk at Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co.

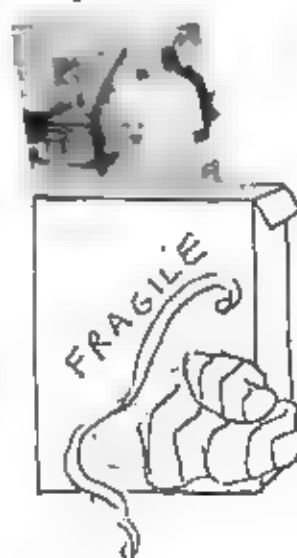

"I like working in a more businesslike atmosphere," said Briggs, "and there are a lot of good chances for advancement."

Senior Matt Swanson got a change of pace by having an outdoor job. Swanson worked for Tom Olson Lawn Care where he mowed lawns in the fall and shoveled sidewalks in the winter.

"I like being outside and the exercise is good for me," said Swanson, "but sometimes I don't feel like mowing, or I'll get a huge lawn I have to mow."

Whether they were for starting a career or for money for anything, jobs played a big part in students' lives.

Relationships

ICE CREAM BUDDIES

Senior Jodie Dierz and Junior Michelle Jones not only can talk about school related things but work also. They met while working at Baskin Robins.

WE'RE TWINS

Companions vary

"During high school we don't just want the company and good opinion of our peers, we crave it, we need it - we're desperate for their regard as a source of emotional survival" (from Is There Life After High School? by Ralph Keyes)

In high school, students found they needed "company" in various kinds of relationships. Whether they were boyfriend/girlfriend, mother/daughter, brother/sister, or as just friends, they helped teens get through high school.

Juniors Kris Walt and Kelly Grady had been friends since the eighth grade. Their boyfriends at the time were friends, and they met each other through them.

As expected, they've disagreed on a few things. "The disagreements were just a bit of mis-communication," said Grady.

Despite those times," Walt said, "she will always be there for me, even if I made her mad."

Nelle Woods and her mother felt they had a special and unique type of relationship. "She seems more like a friend than a mother because I can tell her everything," said Nelle. Nelle and her mom enjoyed eating lunch together on weekends, and they occasionally went off to Kansas City to shop. They both loved to talk and joke around.

Suzanne and Paul Schmeling had more to their relationship than just being brother and sister. They were twins. Suzanne said that they helped each other with their homework and encouraged each other in their sports.

The importance of a relationship between members of the opposite sex in high school are helpful for future relationships. "Relationships are good to help you figure out who's right for you in the future. You can also get to know the other sex, and know how they think and feel," said junior Kori Goldenstein.

Goldenstein had been going out with Jamie Heimer, junior, for over a year. They met through friends at the 1985 Nebraska State Fair.

"We like to do things with friends, go out to eat, see a movie, or just go over to each other's house," said Heimer.

"I think the reason we have stayed together for so long is because we both have patience and trust," said Goldenstein. They both agreed that communication is very important in a relationship.

BEST OF FRIENDS

Being friends means sharing experiences, confidences, and even lockers. Juniors Chris Walt and Kelly Grady say they have been friends since eighth grade.

MORE THAN A MOM

Not many people have moms that will find time out of their day to play with their cheeks. Senior Nelle Woods and her mother share just such a teasing moment.

Giant the men - Well I'd have to say I've been quite the jerk this year and I'll also have to say I'm sorry, but sometimes my shyness gets the best of me and don't get me wrong I'd love to get to know you better and develop a strong, lasting friendship - no doubt about that. Thanks for all your niceness and caring this year - it does mean a lot to me. Whether or not I displayed that to you, you are a special friend and don't forget that because that would suit - you know, with me a little more, you're a big college man on campus because I'd like to know what you're doing.

are what they're about

Theme dances prevail

"We've come a long way, baby..." (from a sock-hop to the Pajama Jam, from the Charleston to slam-dancing) "...and my, how we've changed!"

Many dances were held at Southeast and each of them had a certain theme. The Hawaiian Dance, Pajama Jam and Toga Dance were just a few.

"I think the themes are getting boring," senior Brian Hoffman said, "they're the same every year."

But, Hoffman and Junior Carol Muller said they would not want to have a dance without a theme.

"Themes are good...they're the purpose for the dance," Muller said.

Hoffman and Muller agreed they liked the dances because of all the people, but they said they did not go to a lot of them because "there [was] something more exciting going on," Hoffman said.

"I don't like the music that's played," Muller said.

According to sophomore Pat Piper, one of the reasons the dances were not that much fun was because "people are afraid to dress up [in theme costume]."

At the dances, Hoffman, Muller, and Piper said they talked and got into groups and danced.

"I talk and slam a little bit...and get into groups and jump up and down," Hoffman said.

A Student Council dance was planned two weeks before Prom.

"Eaton didn't want [us] to have that date...It really doesn't matter that much to us," said junior Susan Brown, Student Council member.

Brown said the only reason the date was not the best was because Student Council was busy in the spring.

Most of the Southeast dances were informal, but there were a few that were otherwise. Homecoming and Prom required more formal dressing, rather than pajamas or a lei.

Another place Southeast students went dancing was at Celebration, which had Teen Night on Sundays. Strooges was also a popular place for the Knights on Wednesday, Friday and Sunday nights.

Comedy/drama tackles arms issue

Search for arms answer

When students found out the fall play was about nuclear war, many felt the play was going to be a very serious drama.

This wasn't the case with "End of the World". The tone of the play was a comedy/drama.

The play revolved around a playwright, Mike Trent, who was played by senior Ben Zink. Trent, who saw himself as a "Mike Hammer" type of detective and wore a trenchcoat throughout most of the play, investigated the arms issue.

The play could have been considered autobiographical because playwright Arthur Kopit was commissioned to write this play about nuclear war.

"I decided to do this play because I thought it had an important script," said Carol Svoboda, supervisor and director of the play. "It made people think about nuclear war, but it wasn't depressing. I liked how it approached the issue with humor."

Junior Kristin Linder played Stone, the woman who wanted Trent to write a play about nuclear war. "My character was hard to relate to because she had this fascination with nuclear war."

"I don't think we will have a nuclear war in my lifetime," said sophomore Lisa Keith, "but the play kind of made me think about nuclear war and what it would be like."

"I thought the most important part of the play was in the third scene where Trent made the two discoveries," Svoboda said.

Trent discovered the reasoning behind the nuclear arms race, and why he was commissioned to write the play.

I also liked the part when Stone was describing the weapons and the nuclear tests she had seen," Svoboda added.

"I liked being in the play," said Steinauer. "I'm kind of shy, so I wanted to see if I could see if I could do it. It was a new experience and I met a lot of really nice people."

WILD WEEKENDS

A never-ending quest

Weekends provided an escape from the previous school week. They gave many a chance to relax and to be themselves.

"If you're creative you can have a great time," said Junior Aaron Districh. He said that he and his friends usually just drove around, "looking for parties and fun."

McDonald's and Burger King on 48th Street were a hot spot for students. "I've seen a lot of parties there," said Junior Don Turner. "I've seen her friends hung out at Burger King until they were kicked out, and then they would go to McDonald's."

Shelley Donovan, senior, said that she would go to either to McDonald's, Burger King, or the Kwik Shop to find out where the parties were and to meet people.

The word "party" usually perturbed a few ears. Senior Brian Hoffman joked that no matter how hard he looked, he could never find the party at 18th and Washington.

W.C. Franks was a "hangout" for some sophomores. Nate Blank and Todd Behlmyer, sophomores, both said that they hung out at W.C.'s with their friends to pass the time away.

Hang out at people's homes was a cheaper and more relaxed form of weekend entertainment for some. "We don't drive around in circles as much as we did last year," said senior Garry Wood. "There are a lot of get-togethers at people's houses."

Besides hanging out and partying, there were movies to see. Junior Brian Cummings said he was a regular at the "Rocky Horror Picture Show." It's an audier (a parody) of the movie where you yell and throw rice, toast, and let it rip at the screen," said Cummings.

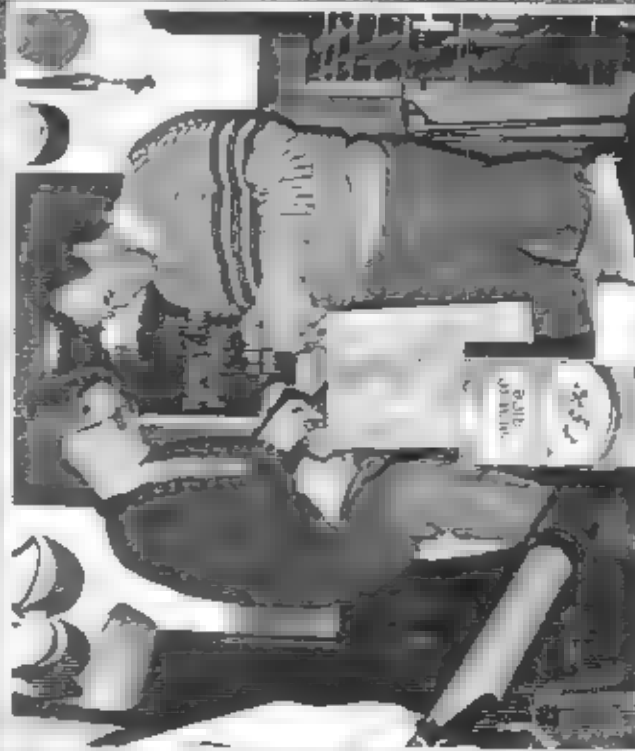

Along with the group activities there was the one to one activity: dating.

"I usually go out on a date on Saturdays," said Joe for Kelley Stevens. Cummings said he occasionally "bummed out" at his girlfriend's place.

Weekends provided many options for entertainment, but it didn't seem like up to the typical weekend. "Everyone does the same thing just at different times."

WERE FIRED
J. McNeil and Sheri McCauley celebrated the coming of Friday at the Panama Club, a dance sponsored by the cheerleaders.

MINUTEMAN DANCE
Preparing for the "Rocky Horror Picture Show", seniors Craig Merry and Andrew Russell dug their toes into the dance floor, and other supplies to throw at the screen at the appropriate times.

Everybody had access to a locker and a lockers were basically created equal. But that didn't mean they had to stay that way.

WEEK 11 Friday has finally arrived! P. A. 7:11 7:11 This has been 7:11 the best day. In four out of my six classes I did nothing. The first two classes I got to sleep because we had films, and then third period there was an assembly where some dude talked about I don't know what. I was discussing party locations so I wasn't exactly paying attention. Q. A. W. E. L. L. Then, fourth period we had a pep rally and when it was over we took an extra 20 minutes to walk back to class. So when we got back there were only two minutes left before the bell rang. All in all, it was a total 1:55 day and I came out with 11:00. WEEK 12 K for the weekend. I swear, days like this happen once in a blue moon. Oh yeah, during fifth period Jim pulled the fire drill so we got out of class for another 10 minutes. I can't believe he did it! But it was totally worth it.

Well, I'm gonna go now. In about an hour the gang and I are going out. We have a list of 15 parties!! Aahh, I get to sleep in tomorrow too.

WEEK 13 GOSH! I completely forgot! That 17 page paper is due on MONDAY!! Oh well, I have the whole weekend. I'm sure I'll find time to work on it.

Knight and Lady

Traditional honor continues

Knight and Lady was an annual award given to five senior boys and five senior girls based on their achievement in and out of school.

This traditional award began in 1957 with only one senior boy and girl chosen by the yearbook staff. Eventually, the number of recipients changed to ten, and Student Council was given the duty of handling the elections.

The process for choosing the finalists began with Student Council making a list of guidelines for this award and distributing these guidelines to the faculty. The faculty then nominated people who they felt met these criteria best. A ballot was drawn up based on these nominations, and the faculty voted on the final ten.

The guidelines for this award were as follows: involvement in school, involvement in the community, scholastic achievement, respect of faculty and staff, and respect of fellow students.

The president of Student Council, Knight Jim Neld was a varsity swimmer for three years, as well as president of Water Polo Club and a National Honor Society member Playing varsity volleyball and basketball being a drum major didn't keep Lady Dana Melnke from being in National Honor Society. Also a talented bassoon player, she performed with groups in and out of school.

With the top PSAT score in the state, Knight Matt Wigdahl became a National Merit Finalist. In the top of his class, he was president of Science Club and Math Club, as well as being in National Honor Society.

A three-year varsity gymnast and diver, Lady Shannon Toolson also used her athletic abilities to be a cheerleader and Shirette. In the top of her class, she was a National Honor Society member

A varsity swimmer and president of his class every year, Knight Ed Pallesen also found time to be the yearbook editor. He was a member of National Honor Society and a National Merit Finalist.

Staying on her toes academically and physically, Lady Jennifer Sartori was vice-president of National Honor Society and French Club, and she danced ballet, tap, and jazz in her time outside of school.

Strong swimming skills were Knight J.B. Barr's claim to fame; he broke two state records and was co-captain of the varsity team. Also strong academically, he was a member of National Honor Society.

Being co-captain of the varsity wrestling team, didn't stop Knight Marcus Batters from earning National Honor Society status. In addition, he was elected Prom King and vice-president of his class.

The queen of Prom and Homecoming, Lady Ginny Wood was also elected a Student Council member and class officer, and she was a National Honor Society member, cheerleader, and three-year varsity tennis player.

While achieving membership in National Honor Society, Lady Heidi Schwendiman was singing with Countesses and Noblemen and dancing with the Shirelles as their captain.

SISTERLY ADVICE

Seniors share school with siblings

Some seniors shared school with their sophomore siblings.

"It's easy to take things out on her because she's always here at school," said senior Jessica Simon about her sophomore sister Claire.

Along with that disadvantage, Simon said that their arguments were always "overexaggerated" because everyone knew about the disagreements and made a big deal about them.

Katie Dimon, senior, also found a disadvantage in having a sister with her at school. "I hear gossip about her all the time," said Dimon of her sister Sarah, a sophomore.

When it came to homework, though, the Dimons found their relationship to be an advantage. Katie and Sarah took the same French class and could help each other with their assignments.

Senior Brad Vasa said that an advantage to having his brother Troy, junior, at school with him is that he could borrow money when necessary.

Brad said he thought that the younger sibling had the advantage, because they could use the experiences of the older. He said he helped Troy with homework and advised him about which teachers to get.

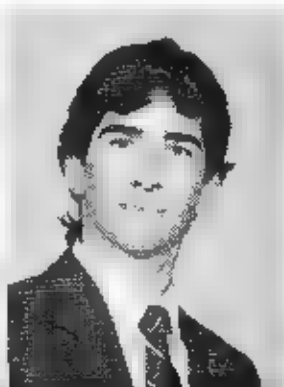

The Haefles found their mutual interests in sports and common friendships to be an advantage in their school relationship.

Sue Haefle, senior, said that she and Lynn, her sophomore sister, were both involved on the volleyball and basketball teams. Since they had the same friends, they spent a lot of time together after games and on weekends.

"I think she's a great sister," said Sue Haefle.

LAST PICTURE

In the last picture taken before his death, Mike Hansen poses in front of his car as he prepares to leave on a trip to Colorado

Death of student fuels seat belt issue

Mike Hansen died in a one-car accident on August 26, a week before he was to begin his senior year at Southeast.

Hansen, senior Scott Wright, and two others not from Southeast, Denise Badders and Sydney Brown, were thrown from the car when Hansen lost control of it on South Coddington Drive, a gravel road. Wright, Badders, and Brown were injured, but survived.

Seat belts were not worn by Hansen or his passengers. "If Mike would have worn his seat belt," Wright said in a letter to the Clarion, "he would be alive today."

As a result of Hansen's death, Wright and teacher Mike Ware waged a campaign promoting the use of seat belts and asking voters to support the seat belt law.

"We want to have something good come from Mike's death," Ware wrote in a Clarion editorial. "Help us prevent another tragedy."

As a part of their campaign, Ware and Wright conducted a seat belt poll and an observation of student drivers.

The seat belt poll was taken by approximately equal numbers of sophomores, juniors, and seniors. Out of 173 students, 50 percent said they "always" wore their seat belts; 15 percent said "never".

To observe student drivers, Ware, Wright, and eight volunteers positioned themselves at the exits of the school parking lots. Out of 219 cars and 505 people, 44 percent of the drivers, 41 percent of the front passengers, and 16 percent of the rear passengers were wearing their seat belts.

In memory of Mike Hansen, a memorial fund was formed which was to be used for scholarships for Southeast students.

DATELESS

To the untrained eye, senior John Dawson may appear to have two dates when he, in fact, has none. He's simply socializing at the Pajama Jam with seniors Madeleine Craig and Lara Thompson.

Dateless weekend nights lack tragedy

When it was a Friday or Saturday night, and the plans for the evening did not revolve around a date, it wasn't a tragedy for many.

"If you don't have a date, it's not such a big deal anymore," said Heidi Schwendiman, senior.

Schwendiman said she enjoyed finding "stupid things" to do with her friends when she didn't have a date. Those "things" included playing practical jokes on people or just hanging around at people's homes and talking.

"I just stay at home and watch T.V. If I don't have a date," said sophomore Karl Swanson.

Swanson said that when she was faced with a dateless weekend, she opted for bowling and hanging out with friends at at Valentino's after basketball games.

Exercising was chosen by some when they didn't have a date. Todd Bowman, junior, said he went to the Raquet Club and lifted weights. Either that, or he would get a bunch of friends together and play Ping-Pong.

Trevin Seng, junior, found that sleeping was one way to kill a weekend, and found "partying" to be an alternative to dating.

"I move with the parties," said Seng.

A dateless Friday or Saturday night didn't have to be a letdown, as junior Jona Turner found out.

"Just because you don't have a date, it doesn't mean you're undateable because different people have different chemistry," said Turner.

Turner said that on some nights she rented movies and invited friends over. Other times she said she kept busy by watching Falcon Crest and Dallas.

"I like doing stuff with my friends, but a date would be great once in a while," said Turner.

THE GOOD OL' DAYS

Students remember high school times

After seniors graduated, they carried with them not only a high school education, but also a lot of memories.

"I will always remember my friends, going to sports events, being on swing choir and diving team," said senior Brent Kuenning. "I think my friends and everything made going to school worthwhile."

"I will never forget piling into my friend's bug for lunch when we were sophomores," said senior Judy Florom.

"I will always remember when I was a sophomore and I swallowed a pen cap," said senior Julie Bauers.

Senior Doug Kruce said, "I will remember when our girls basketball team took State last year. It was the first time in history. I'll also remember when I got hurt in football."

The memories, however, were not always good ones. "One bad thing I'll remember was my car accident," said Kruce.

"I haven't had a lot of bad memories, just things like not getting along with people," said Florom.

Seniors had different ways of remembering, such as pictures, photo albums, notes from class, and notes people wrote in yearbooks.

"I have a favorite memory from Prom. Me and about 20 people had a dinner party at Tony and Luigi's," said Kuenning.

"My favorite memory was on the last day of school when I was a junior. We went to Wagon Train. It was so fun. It was probably the best time I'd had all year," said Kruce.

JUST A PINCH

That's all it takes for "full tobacco pleasure", and a mouth-decaying bad habit, as this student is about to find out

Breaking bad habits seems impossible

"I tell myself to stop, and I try and stop for a week or so, but then I start up again, but it's not as bad as before," said senior Mark Olson.

What Olson was talking about was his habit of chewing tobacco. Bad habits were something everybody had. They ranged anywhere from smoking and chewing to procrastination and speeding.

"I'm always about five minutes late to everything, so that makes me drive too fast," said senior Scott Hatfield. "My other bad habit is fidgeting too much, which irritates everyone around me. Otherwise, I'm perfect."

Hatfield went on to say he thought one reason people started bad habits was because "they are bored, or because they get a thrill off it, like me and my driving too fast."

Being around people who had the same habits was the biggest reason for starting bad habits.

Senior Jenny Wehnes said she loses her temper too much. "I got my bad temper from my dad," said Wehnes. "If I get mad, I try and blow it off or I think about the situation and discuss it calmly instead of yelling about it."

Most people agreed that stopping their bad habits was a lot harder than starting them. Senior Mimi Lambert found it impossible to stop her habit of procrastinating. "I will think of any halfbrained excuse not to do something," she said.

Hatfield said he's never tried to stop his bad habits because "they don't bother me at all."

EARLY BIRDS

Having planned far enough ahead to meet the requirements for mid-term graduation, these seniors are meeting to go over the final details before the semester ends.

Early graduation allows head start

For most seniors, the end of first semester meant a longer weekend and only one more semester to go. For others, the mid-term graduates, it marked the end of their high school years.

Mid-term graduates had a variety of reasons for leaving high school early.

"I had enough credits," explained senior John Reifschneider, "and I'd rather get out of school and earn some money." Reifschneider had already lined up a full-time job as a meat cutter at a grocery store, Hinky Dinky.

Mid-term graduate Alex Okray explained his early graduation. "I already put in enough class hours in my sophomore and junior years that I shouldn't take it anymore except with university classes."

Jerry Fynbu, senior, said that he graduated at mid-term because he didn't like high school and thought that Southeast was "a hole". To Fynbu, graduation meant moving out and saving money for college.

Others, like senior Roberta Kleman, graduated to begin college earlier. She started regular classes at Southeast Community College in March.

To mid-term graduates like Kleman, a graduation ceremony did not mean much. "I don't think it's a big deal. I don't think a big graduation ceremony makes that big of a difference."

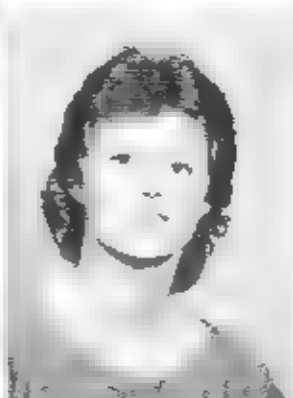

Reifschneider thought otherwise. "Graduating at mid-term isn't half as exciting as graduating at the end of a year." He added that he would have liked to have had a mid-term graduation ceremony.

But, with or without a big graduation ceremony, mid-term graduates left Southeast at the end of the first semester.

"I wanted that 'extra push'," further explained Okray, "and I feel that graduating mid-term gives me it."

TEACHER'S PET?

Seniors offer teacher-pleasing tips

Many students have taken one of those classes where grades seemed to be based on how well the teacher liked each student rather than on how well the subject matter was understood.

For some, it also seemed like there were rules to the game of winning a teacher's favor.

Good behavior in class was an important strategy, and senior Judy Peaks offered some tips. "Always smile and act like you are listening, and enjoying, and understanding everything the teacher is saying. Laugh at all of their jokes - stupid or not."

She also advised communicating with friends in sign language rather than speaking, and sleeping with your eyes open.

Another senior with advice about classroom behavior was Tony Loth. He recommended not being a trouble-maker, being friendly rather than obnoxious, and appearing attentive.

Another basic strategy was doing homework and other assignments well. "Always write neatly," said Loth. "Ask for specifications like whether or not to double space and what the margins are supposed to be, and always write more than you're required to."

Loth added that asking to do favors for the teacher, "brown-nosing", didn't really accomplish much. "It gives you a better teacher-student relationship, but it doesn't always help your grade."

COLLEGE BOUND

Post high school years bring anxiety

When the topic of graduation came up, it brought to mind caps and gowns, diplomas, and parties. However, graduation also meant the end of high school, which was a frightening prospect for many seniors.

One of the biggest fears for seniors was going away to school and leaving that to which they were accustomed.

"People say 'Yeah, I'm going away to college and it's going to be great,' but you don't feel the complete impact of leaving until you are there," said senior Jim Neid. "It can completely change your built-up friendships in just one year."

Senior Cherise Gritti said she felt her biggest fear was leaving her friends and "not having Mom and Dad there to give me money all the time."

Senior Ann Kozak said she already knew that she wanted to work in the music business, but was afraid of not succeeding.

Most everyone agreed that one way to overcome this fear was to talk to people who have already graduated. "I've known many, many people who have gone away to school, so it's not like it can't be done," said Neid. "On the whole it will be an entirely new experience. Once you get accustomed to the change, it won't be a fear like it is right now."

PUT ON A PEDISTAL

A montage of running pictures, particularly of runner Steve Cram, are displayed on senior Jay Greathouse's locker door

Choice of idols changes with taste

Idols could have been anyone: sports heroes, musicians, actors, relatives or even a best friend

Senior Jil Briggs said, "One of the musicians I admire is Vanity, just because she's gorgeous and open and she doesn't care what other people think."

Idols, however, did change. "When I was little, I idolized Farrah Fawcett," said Briggs.

"I think your idols change over the years because you grow up and change," said senior Jay Greathouse. He'd changed the focus of his admiration from his father to Steve Cram, a runner.

"He came from the bottom and suddenly overnight he was a household name," Greathouse said.

"I think my idols have changed because before I thought, 'Oh, they're so cute!' but now I look at their qualities and their personality," said senior Juli Johnson.

When Johnson was younger she idolized Shawn Cassidy and Donny Osmond, but she switched to President Kennedy. "I think he was neat because he was so open and relaxed with people."

Senior Steve Smith said he admired Clint Eastwood. "I think he's pretty cool, I like his lifestyle."

"People need idols as someone to look up to," said Briggs. "I think my idols have changed because I have grown up and changed."

"I think people idolize other people because they have qualities that they admire for themselves," said Johnson.

"I think people have idols to fashion themselves after," said Greathouse. "But I wouldn't be surprised if my idols changed again."

LOTS OF LEGOS

Wanting to be an architect was one of senior Carrie Imig's childhood dreams. This urge to design began when Imig played with Legos.

Facing the real world alters dreams

Some students' childhood dreams of their future goals changed as they began to face reality.

Senior Andy Bretz said he had always dreamed of becoming a fireman. He got the idea from the television show, "Emergency". After becoming "older and wiser", however, he decided to be an accountant.

"I'm good with numbers and there is lots of opportunity for it," said Bretz.

Bretz's aspirations were not all career-oriented, though. When it came to girls, he never had just one in mind. Bretz said that in elementary school he had "hundreds of girlfriends." Now he said there are only "distinct possibilities."

Senior Dawn Parks said, "When I was little, I used to like Matt Renner. I thought we would get married."

When Parks was younger, college was not in her future plans, but the pursuit of a career changed that.

"I thought I would never go to college. I thought I would just be a housewife. Then I decided that I wanted to be a teacher, so I have to go to college."

Parks said she had originally wanted to be a teacher because she liked to boss little kids around. But, her interests changed, and she aimed for a fashion career instead.

"I love clothes and I love to shop and I also like to design things," she said.

Money was a primary factor in senior Stephanie Gray's childhood dreams. "I wanted to marry a prince and be rich," said Gray, "and I used to pretend I was married to John Schnieder."

Even when she was a child, Gray picked a high-paying occupation, "I used to want to go to Harvard and be a lawyer because I thought it would be neat to go to court and help people."

Gray said she wanted to go to the dental college at the University of Nebraska, though, because she thought it "would be difficult to get into the law profession."

Underclassmen are full of talent

It has been said that, as you progress through life, whether or not you succeed depends on how much effort you put forth.

There was an array of successful students with surprising talents and gifts, but often times other students never discovered these gifts.

Sophomore Lee Kiechel's talent with horses won her an award; the 1986 National Dressage Association's "Horse of the Year" award. Kiechel received the award on December 12.

She had ridden her German warm-blood, Wienergraf, for five years and said she considered this accomplishment very fulfilling and deserved.

"After five years of hard work, it is nice to get something to show for your endurance," claimed Kiechel.

In addition, there were those students who were able not only to keep their academics at a high level, but also to excel at some form of extracurricular activity.

Junior Kathy Titsworth was a good example of a student with the ability to juggle practicing with studying. Cross country and track filled her afternoons, and her desire to receive good grades in A.P. History and Band required many hours of studying history and practicing flute.

"It seems I never have enough time to myself, but the feeling of accomplishment when I finish a race, ace a test, or help spirit our team to a victory is well worth my time," said Titsworth.

Another student who excelled both academically and athletically was Junior Marcus Rowe. Besides playing varsity football during his junior year, Rowe managed to maintain a straight one average.

"I've always kept the theory that if you want to do good at something you need to work at it, or practice, as in football," explained Rowe. "Otherwise, you're not giving your full effort forth, so you won't receive the full benefit of your work."

Hobbies of all sorts were practiced by many students. Sophomore Chelsea Chelsen had a hobby that started at childhood. She had started playing violin following the Suzuki method at age three.

In the beginning, it was her parents' idea for her to take lessons. Yet, Chelsen admitted, "You just kind of get caught up in it and can't quit, it becomes part of your life."

Although Chelsen was taking lessons at UNL from the conductor of the Lincoln Youth Symphony, she said she did not want to make a career of playing the violin.

"I do it for fun, not for a living," claimed Chelsen. "I see a lot of musicians that are totally starving."

Surely, these were not the only sophomores or juniors who accomplished something or who deserved credit for their attempts at self-improvement. Each student in his or her own mind should have been able to list many feats of which they were proud, or about which they could have said they did their best.

NOT JUST HORSEING AROUND

Sporting the blue ribbon for first place in the dressage competition, sophomore Lee Kiechel and her horse, Wienergraf, pause before the crowd.

LEARNING LINES

Concentrating on her character for the fall play, "The End of the World", junior Linda Barger studies her part to make her performance top-notch.

Student participates in Florida pageant

Nov. 10 - Nov 21, Stacy Kruse and her mother Janice Kruse were in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, to compete in a mother-daughter beauty pageant.

"We were among the 28 semi-finalists picked from 550 to be in the pageant," said Mrs. Kruse.

Stacy said, "We had one day where we fun-taped. They taped me and my mom lifting weights and doing aerobics."

"Eventually," said Mrs. Kruse, "They made those tapings into commercials for the pageant show."

But, it wasn't all fun in the sun. They worked long and hard for the night when they would shine as stars.

On the preliminary night, Mrs. Kruse said, "We had to model swim wear in front of all the judges, go into a room of seven judges and again they shot questions at us, and then model evening gowns."

Being on stage wasn't as frightening as most people would think, they said.

Stacy said, "We practiced so much on it that when it came down to it, it was so routine."

The night of the "real" pageant had arrived. After 10 days of rehearsals, rehearsals, and still more rehearsals, the lights, cameras, and action was greatly appreciated by the audience.

Within 40 minutes into the pageant, the top eight semi-finalists were announced.

Mrs. Kruse said, "We didn't make it, and I was terribly disappointed." On the other hand, Stacy said she wasn't disappointed because she didn't want to be seen in a swim suit on T.V.

After the swim wear, evening gown, and dancing competitions, and another question, the winners were announced. They were the mother-daughter couple from Miami.

Then came the "real" disappointment of the whole trip. Nov. 21 had arrived and it was time to depart for home.

Big-name bands come to Lincoln

Screaming guitars, pounding drums and flashing lights were popular sights and sounds in the past year in the Lincoln area. Many big-name bands played in the area including R.E.M., UB40, David Lee Roth, The Romantics, and others.

Also, a variety of styles, such as new wave, heavy metal, country, rock, and pop could be heard on the radio.

With this much variety, many students were lured to concerts to hear their favorite stars perform live and to get the feeling only a concert atmosphere could provide.

Junior Jill Haskell went to the R.E.M. concert and said, "It was so fun because so many of my friends were there."

Before the concert, Haskell and her friends listened to R.E.M. in their car to get ready for the concert. They arrived at Pershing Auditorium about 1 1/2 hours before the concert started to get a good place in front of the stage.

"We danced through the whole thing," Haskell said. Amanda Pursell, senior, also attended the R.E.M. concert and came home with a cracked rib from being crushed against a barricade in front of the stage.

"We got there super-early and we got pushed through the doors, then Michael Stipe (the lead singer) came on and everyone lunged forward and pushed me onto the barricade," Pursell cried with pain as her friend hyperventilated and got sick.

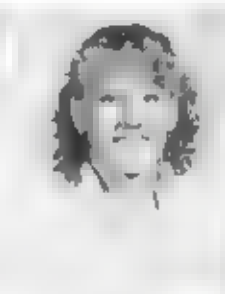

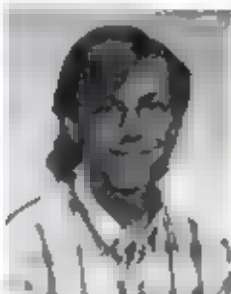

"Before the concert, we listened to R.E.M. tapes and during the concert we just danced and had a great time," she said.

Pursell had also been to see The Psychadelic Furs, Rick Springfield, and The Beach Boys concerts.

Most concerts were held at Pershing Auditorium, Bob Devaney Sports Center, The Royal Grove, The Drumstick, and the Civic Auditorium in Omaha.

Class overload causes "junior blues"

Was there any evidence to support the rumor that the junior year was the most stressful?

The junior year was, for many, the hardest year in high school.

Some juniors said they felt that the junior year was the time to get hard classes out of the way. The importance of attaining high grades, which colleges would see, also gave the juniors something to worry about.

"I think the junior year is harder because decisions are made on what classes we need to take to get ready for college," said junior Dan Hadley.

A student who was getting the hard classes over with ahead of time was junior Dennis Rieke. His class load for his first semester included: Chemistry, Physics, Pre-calculus, German 3-4 and English Literature.

On top of that, Rieke also had a job.

Another student who had a heavy class load was junior Jason Agee.

Agee's classes included two A.P. Classes, Philosophy, German 3-4, Algebra 3-4 and Chemistry.

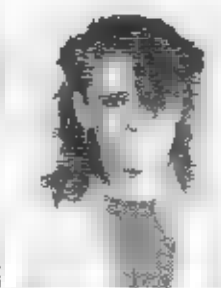

How did students get through the "junior blues"? And why did many juniors take such hard classes?

Junior Jason Brasch, who had an A.P. class said, "I took the hard class because everyone else does it." He also said that his junior year was a little easier for him than was his sophomore year.

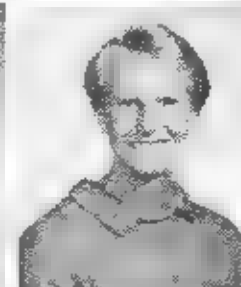

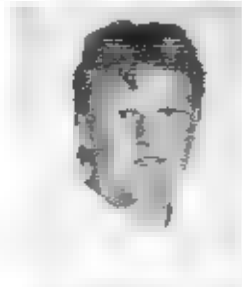

Many others agreed that getting through the junior year was tough. Some just "take it as it comes, and do their best," as Agee noted.

Curriculum, friends attract transfers

"I came to Southeast for more selection of classes," said junior Chad Bailey, "and there are more girls."

In addition to getting a new crop of sophomores each year, Southeast got students who had transferred from other schools for a variety of reasons, such as class selection and friends.

One major difference for transfer students was the size of Southeast. Bailey attended Lincoln Christian from kindergarten to tenth grade. The size of the school was 350 people, from kindergarten to twelfth grade.

"I like Southeast because there are a lot more people and the teachers are nicer," said Bailey, "and there are a lot more parties."

Junior Kimm Nelson transferred from College View Academy, a high school with 97 students, for the better class choices and because her friends went to Southeast.

"I went my sophomore year because my dad wanted me to, but all my friends from Pound and Zeman are here, so I transferred," said Nelson.

Except for leaving their friends at their old school, neither student could find anything wrong with transferring.

"I like the people here because they are more individualized," said Nelson. "The students at CVA are too trendy and are always trying to be like everyone else."

Bailey summed up his feelings on his change of schools by saying, "I'm having a lot of fun here. I'm glad I transferred."

Getting to school can be confusing

"What time are you leaving?"

"What corner should I meet you at?"

"I thought you were driving today!"

These are examples of what some students had to go through every morning just to find out how they were getting to school. Some students walked, others drove, and some rode their bikes.

Although most students arrived on time, there were people who got to school early and sat in their cars until just before the bell rang, and those who showed up at the last minute.

Junior John Roper was one of the people who generally arrived with no time to spare. "The reason I get to school late is because I like to get that last minute of sleep," said Roper.

Also, there were the students who got rides from their parents, usually sophomores without licenses. "I get a ride from my dad because I leave for school the same time he leaves for work," said junior Aaron Dietrich. "That way I can save gas and I won't have to worry about finding a parking place."

Juniors Mark Bunde and Geoff Rownd, who lived a block apart, said they took turns driving to school. "Some days we pick up other people on the way to school," said Bunde. "It's easier having to find just one parking place instead of two or three."

Junior Dan Gauchat got himself to school with his motorcycle, even when it was cold outside. "I ride my motorcycle because it takes less gas, and I never have to worry about finding a place to park," said Gauchat.

PSAT prepares juniors for college

As early as their junior year in high school, many students began preparing for college.

One form of planning was by taking classes which gave them an idea about what a certain career was like. Another form of planning was through the PSAT.

The PSAT was a test that was given only once a year in the fall. Although mainly juniors took the test, sophomores could also take it.

Through the PSAT, there was a scholarship awarded to the finalists who scored the highest. One of the semi-finalists was senior Todd Burger.

Burger, who prepared well for the test by attending the workshop and reading the booklet, said, "The honor of placing as a semi-finalist was something meaningful."

The efforts put out by Burger with his everyday school work paid for themselves with good grades. As far as the extra effort he put into the PSAT, Burger said, it would pay off by "getting into a good college."

Jessica Simon, who didn't prepare at all for the PSAT, was also a semi-finalist. "I really didn't even know what it was for," she said.

Nerves affect tryout performance

In order to be in certain activities or events, it was necessary to try out for them.

Senior Brian Gordon tried out for the varsity basketball team and made it. He said tryouts narrowed down the best people possible for an activity.

"It creates a challenge like competition," said Gordon.

Senior Sandy Winkler tried out for Synkra-Knights. She said that tryouts gave her a chance to compete and to find out how she compared to others.

"I felt I did the best I could, but I was also concerned how I compared to others," said Winkler.

Trying out could also be a self-confidence booster like it was for junior Kerri Nazarenus.

"I felt I succeeded in doing what I set out to do," said Nazarenus.

Nazarenus also said that she could see how not being successful at tryouts could destroy someone's self-image.

"It's important to keep a positive attitude while trying out," said Nazarenus.

Chores vary from horses to houses

HARD LABOR
Junior Mike Yelkin labors as he mows his lawn, which he does every week for an allowance.

Chores. No one liked to do them, but they had to be done. Some people got rewarded for doing them, others didn't.

Chores could have been different for every person. Some chores included taking care of pets.

Senior Alice Bunge had her own horse, so her chores included its care and feeding. "I clean the stalls, feed them grain and hay, and ride them," Bunge said. "I feed it before school, and after school I clean the stalls."

"It's my horse, so I like to do the chores. If I didn't do them, I'd feel guilty, but I think my mom would do them for me," said Bunge.

Junior Matt Dorsey said he did his chores because, if he didn't, he'd "get yelled at".

"I take out the garbage, vacuum and dust," Dorsey said. "I'm supposed to do my chores every day after school."

"I think my parents have me do them so I get some kind of an idea of work. I get an allowance of $50 a month for my chores," said Dorsey.

Senior Jeff Carstens says his parents had him do chores to help them out.

"I make my bed, do my laundry and wash the dishes. I get an allowance of $15 a week," said Carstens. "I do my chores whenever I have time, but if I don't do them, nothing much happens."

Senior Heather Horacek cleaned the house and got paid $10 a week. "I do my chores after school when I have time. But, if I don't do them, I get docked."

Horacek said she thought her mother had her do chores to teach her some responsibility. "Also, it helps me out," she said. "It gives me some money, so I'm not broke!"

School causes stress for students

Stress. Everybody has felt it at some time, some more often than others.

The school year was often associated with large amounts of stress, and this past year was no exception.

For sophomores, there were increased graduation requirements, a different atmosphere than in their junior highs, and increased responsibilities.

Seniors like Mark Olson said they worried about graduation in the spring. Olson, like many seniors, worked, and that cut down on the time needed to live up to the school's expectations.

Olson said the most stressful class for him was Algebra, which was a common response that others gave.

Juniors and seniors also worried about college applications and where they would be in the next few years. Competition on tests such as the SAT and ACT was a major source of anxiety, especially for those who got nervous taking even minor quizzes at school.

Grade competition was tough. But, for most people, stress came from a combination of several factors.

Sophomore Tom Meyer said that stress was "an accumulation of problems that you can't handle."

Olson described it as "being worried about how you're going to do, or if you will be successful."

Whatever stress was, the common opinion of those asked was that we certainly had enough this year.

High school brings expectations, fears

HIGH SCHOOL CROWD

Crowds of students are what many sophomores expect, and see when they first come to high school.

Many people, when they entered high school, had many first-year expectations. Some got fulfilled and some did not.

In response to the question, "Were your first year expectations fulfilled?" senior Bill Dennis replied, "Yeah, pretty much," and he went on to say, "Nobody beat me up."

Juniors Shannon Moncure and Wesley Crabb were posed with this question. Moncure's response was, "Yeah, I guess."

Crabb's response was a simple "yes", but went on to state that "I didn't have any problems with the people here."

Sophomores were typically thought of as the ones with the big expectations, so two sophomores, Kanise Rupert and Halle Beverage, were asked.

Rupert said, "I expected to make a lot more friends and to have a lot more challenges put in front of me."

Beverage simply said, "Better than I expected."

Many newcomers to high school had their expectations. As stated before, some were fulfilled and some were not.

Begging for rides gets old

Can I have a ride? That was a typical question you may have heard coming out of a sophomore's mouth. Many sophomores were burdened by the condition of not being able to drive.

"It's not convenient," said sophomore Halie Beverage. "My parents have to take me everywhere."

"My parents are beginning to think they're a taxi service," said sophomore Darci Davis.

Sophomore Julie McIntyre said "not being able to drive has its many disadvantages, like not being able to go where you want to, when you want to."

"Having a boyfriend that can drive is very profitable," she added.

Many sophomores relied on friends for their transportation. "Being without a license is a pain because you can't go anywhere without your parents or a friend giving you a ride," said sophomore Laura Hanway.

Sophomores that asked for rides could also be annoying. "When you ask people for a ride they look at you like they don't want to give you one," said sophomore Carla Schlautman.

Sophomores that turned 16 before summer were typically swarmed by all their friends asking for a ride to lunch. "I like to take people out to lunch," said sophomore Laura Vitiska, "but it gets old day after day."

It may have gotten old to the driver, but to many of those sophomores without licenses or cars, begging was a way of life.

Music tastes vary among students

ON THE AIR
Playing the latest hits on KFRX from midnight to 6 a.m. is "Paul Anthony", otherwise known as senior Mike Dahm.

Is it possible to live in a "Yellow Submarine", drive a "Little Red Corvette", reign as the "King of Pain", and do the "Wang Chung" all in 20 minutes?

For those who had followed the music trends, it was as easy as putting in a tape and letting the music begin.

According to Rob Conway, employee at Pickles record shop, and Kevin Heidtbrink, employee at Dirt Cheap record shop, the most popular music to high-school students was rock-and-roll, pop, and soul.

A few of the popular artists were Boston, Run DMC, Bruce Springsteen, Billy Joel, and Bon Jovi, Conway said. Then there were the "golden oldies" which were the ever-popular Monkees and the Beatles.

But what type of music did students at Southeast prefer? Sophomore Lee Kiechel said, "Music that's fun." She said she preferred this type of music because "it doesn't drag."

"It's just kind of noise in a way," said senior Jeff Classen, describing the kind of music he listened to.

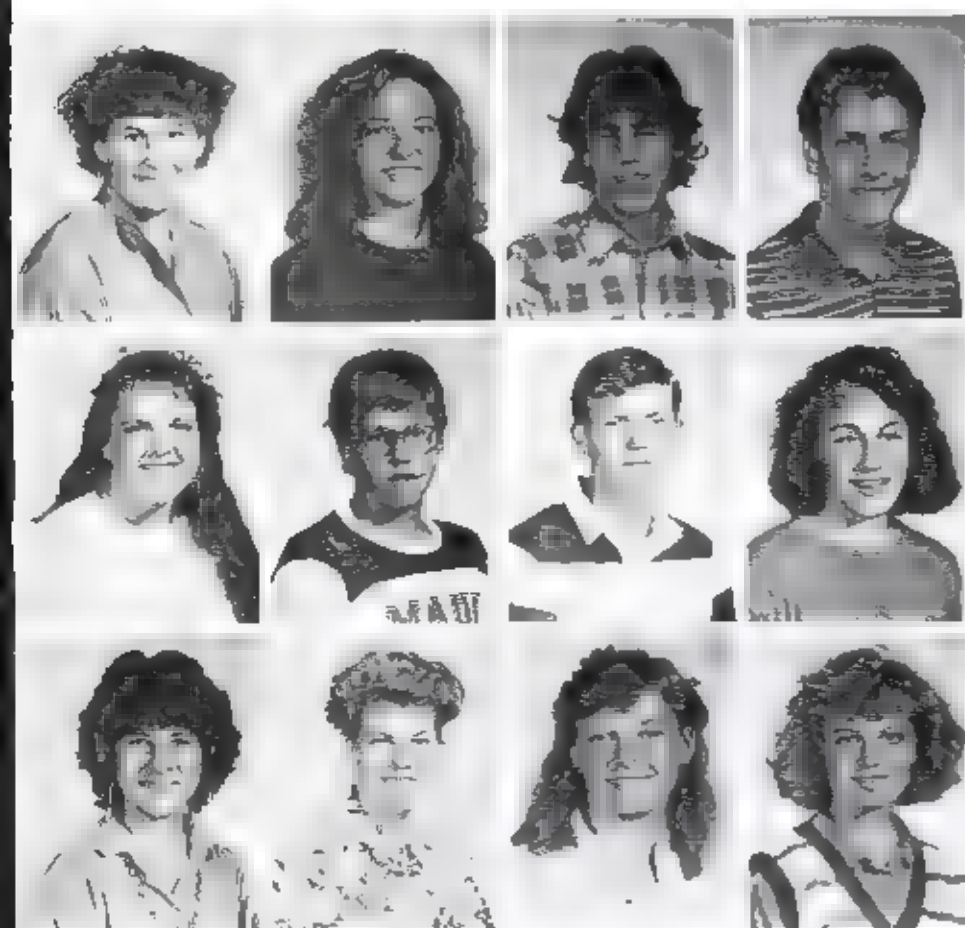

There were many trends in the world of music. Although, Conway and Heidtbrink shared the idea that music has pretty much stayed the same and "it just goes through phases," as Heidtbrink said.

Classen had his views on the latest music trends.

"Top 40' music is now the most popular," he said, adding that "the teeny-bop sound is gross."

Junior Lori Goin said, "Remakes are the latest trend in music."

Nobody likes curfews but parents

DREAMING CURFEW

Thinking about an excuse for getting home late, sophomore Mark Jackson sneaks in the door

Curfews. It seemed everyone complained about them, but did everyone have them?

What were some curfew times for sophomores? Janelle Cox and Alex Hunter both had no curfew because their parents trusted them to be home at a reasonable time.

Laura Porter had a curfew time of 2 a.m., unless it was a special occasion, in which case it was 3 a.m.

"My watch stopped," or, "He drove too slowly," were typical excuses that Porter used when she was late. Since Cox had no curfew, she couldn't be late.

Cox said, "My parents make me wake them up when I get home."

Porter said that parents set curfews "because they don't trust us and they always think you are causing trouble."

Carol Swanson, mother of sophomore Kari Swanson, said that she did not set curfews. "Each event calls for its own time," she said, "so you should be home at a reasonable time after the event."

What was good about curfews? Porter said curfews "make you responsible for your actions."

PRIMP AND PREEN

Sophomore Janelle McDowell is almost ready to leave for school as she finishes drying her hair.

Make-up, nice clothes, and cologne were all a part of the sophomores' daily preparations for school. Sophomore Silke Peterson said she thinks looking good is important.

"I like to look good mainly so I can be confident about myself and my appearance," she said.

Peterson said she takes 45 minutes to get dressed and to do her make-up and hair before going to school.

Another sophomore, Kalli Kanter, said she takes an hour to take a shower and to do her make-up and hair. "It's not very important to me to look good because there is nobody to impress," Kanter said.

What about the guys? It only takes sophomore Charlie Calhoun a half hour to get ready. "It's important to look good so you don't look like a slob," he said.

Another sophomore, Pat Piper, said, "It's important to look good so you can give off a good image."

Teachers' rooms reflect personalities

Much could be discovered about teachers' personalities and teaching styles simply by entering their rooms.

The room of Kerstin VanDervoort, an English teacher, was a good example. The walls of the room were covered with words. VanDervoort described her room as "an antidote to the temptation to despair and to feel nervous about evil."

Posters of where Patrick Hunter-Pirtle has been were a personal touch in his English room.

After he returned from a year-long tour of Europe with his wife, he collected the posters which hung in his room.

Hunter-Pirtle's room was also organized "Everything's in a place," he said, adding that he "sometimes worries that it might seem uncreative."

In a way, it reflected his teaching style which he described as "structured and organized."

Another room filled with personality was Gerald Saunders' Biology room. Among the things kept in his room were skeletons, aquariums, and bottled body parts of animals.

During first semester, his room resembled a zoo as much as anything else because of students' "Alive and Satisfied" projects, in which students brought in living things to study.

Saunders said his room was "spontaneous and not highly structured."

"You get two responses (from people coming into the room)," Saunders said. "Some people can't see past the mess, and some people see the creative mayhem. Make out of it what you will."

Students utilize variety of excuses

Excuses were used for a variety of school-related occasions, ranging from why one was late to class to why one needed to be let out of class early, and especially why last night's homework wasn't finished, or even started.

Teacher's policies on excuses varied. Jane Williams, English and Resource teacher, did not accept them, as a general rule.

But, she said that despite her policy some students did try to use them.

Out of those who did, she said, "You can usually tell when someone is having a problem and has earnestly tried to do (the assignment) and when someone is trying to get out of it."

Social studies teacher Mike Troester explained that, in his class, whether or not he accepted excuses depended a lot on the student.

"After you get to know a student," he said, "you find out what they're like."

Juniors and seniors tended to use more excuses than sophomores, said Troester. Sophomores were usually initially conscientious, while juniors and seniors had a lot more extra-curricular activities and responsibilities. He added that time conflicts seemed to be the biggest problem of the juniors and seniors.

Some of the typical excuses given were: "I left the assignment on my desk at home," and "I didn't have the time because of work/personal problems/other homework/etc," according to Troester.

Some people even tried the old cliché, "The dog ate it."

Academics challenge and surprise

By common consent, one of Southeast's major strengths was in academics. In almost every competition, or by almost any standard, Southeast placed at or near the top of the state and nation educationally. In addition to typically high test scores and many teaching awards, 1986-87 also found Southeast with some surprising and impressive honors, including the most National Merit Semi-Finalists in Nebraska.

One of the primary reasons for this success was the faculty. "There are a lot of excellent teachers here who can make dull subject matter interesting," said senior Jon Bruning.

Knowledge, accessibility, and friendliness—these were some common characteristics of the good teachers. Beyond these general traits, however, some students found different teachers' teaching styles to be especially well-suited to their learning styles.

Bruning had praise for English teacher Kerstin Van Dervoort. "She is a wonderful writing teacher. She is a very abstract person, and that comes through in her teaching. Sometimes that means you aren't sure what you are supposed to be doing, but that can also be exciting. My writing skills improved in her class, and I had fun, too," Bruning said.

Junior Lisa Hansen said, "One of my favorite classes I've ever had is Spanish 9-10 with Mrs. Prendes." The class, which combined seniors and accelerated juniors, was conducive to learning, Hansen said. "There are virtually no tests or quizzes. We have to speak in Spanish the whole time and do other activities which help us learn the language. It's a real challenge, but exciting."

Biology teacher Tim Golden was one of sophomore Steve DiSalvo's favorite teachers. "I like biology mostly because of the way Mr. Golden teaches it. He jokes around and explains things thoroughly. His style makes it fun and interesting," he said.

While everyone enjoyed a fun class, Hansen said some classes inherently couldn't be enjoyable. "I think Mr. Prendes' class is great for learning [but]...in some classes, more structure is important. For instance, in math and science it helps if the teacher is more repetitive, so you can see if you understand what you are doing. Some things may be more difficult, and it helps sometimes if the class is structured," she said.

Bruning advocated a radical idea to remedy a certain aspect of education. "I'm a freewheelin' kind of guy, and realize it may not be too practical, but I think grades should be abolished. It's silly how everyone works for a good grade instead of learning the subject matter," he said.

In the midst of all of the academic pressure, and the pleasant and unpleasant surprises that came with it, a sense of perspective was important, Bruning said. "I work hard, but when I'm not in class, I enjoy myself."

Events both current and past are taught

In order to graduate, students needed five credit hours from each of the three social studies categories: Global Learning, Modern U.S., and Citizenship Issues.

The classes that fell under those categories were: World Studies (two semesters), Global Perspectives (one semester), Modern U.S. History (one semester) and Citizenship Issues (one semester). "Cit. Issues is required, so you have to take it," said senior Melissa Borman. "I learned a lot about how the government and elections are run. I think the class is very informative."

"I think it will help me to understand politics in the future. You need to know what's going on in the world. Cit. Issues helped a lot, especially when we talked about current events."

"I took World Studies because it was a two semester class and it was required," said senior Kari Drda. "I think the class made history as exciting as it could be."

"We learned a lot about European history and current events," said Drda.

"I took Global Perspectives because it was only a semester class and I don't like social studies," said senior Teresa Schlake.

"When we talked about current events and they took place in little countries, I had some idea of where they were."

"I liked the class because it dealt a lot with maps. I learned where the little countries were and the different time zones," said Schlake.

Mike Troester's Economics classes played the Stock Market Game. The game was computer operated, and the students picked their stocks and watched their progress. Then, they sent the results to the University of Nebraska, as other schools did. The results were compared, and a winner was chosen.

"It helps students understand the stock market, which can be confusing to some. It may have spawned some interest in stocks and bonds and could help students invest their money later in life."

Along with games, social studies teachers used newspapers and guest speakers as teaching aids. Field trips were also taken; Tom Douglas' Psychology classes visited Nebraska Wesleyan.

Students visited the Dream/Sleep Laboratory to learn about dreams, interpretations, and what happens to your body while you are asleep.

Thoughts into words

More than reading and writing emphasized

The English department bought some new materials for the classes and expanded the curriculum. The English 10 classes received new anthologies this year. Lillian Lemon, English 10 teacher, said she was pleased with the books because they contained a good selection of short stories and poetry.

Lemon, who also taught American Literature classes, said that a section on author Washington Irving was introduced for the first time this year.

Another addition that helped the English department out was the new computer lab.

Louise Alfrey, head of the English department, said that she was able "to get more students involved with putting papers on computers."

Along with these new additions, there was also an increased enrollment in some areas of English.

Alfrey said that enrollments were up in Grammar and Composition because students were interested in doing well on the ACT and SAT.

"I would also like to see more interest put on students getting involved in speech and communication," said Alfrey.

Alfrey said that there needed to be a push in the speech/communications area, because students needed to learn to articulate ideas orally.

Denise Robeson, a sophomore in Linda Tiekotter-Neff's English 10 class, said that their class spent quite a bit of time working on this area.

"She'll (Tiekotter-Neff) throw controversial questions at us and just listen to all of our opinions and also listen to the questions and debates that go on between the class," said Robeson.

Acting out Caesar's fall

"Et tu, Brute?" Then fall Caesar

Stu Kerns' English 10 class acted out this scene from Julius Caesar. Kerns said he took this death scene of Julius Caesar and assigned some of his students to become various characters in the play.

The group spent a few days practicing and then performed it for the rest of the class. They used a dagger for the main prop in their skit, and Kerns said he hoped to add costumes next year.

Kerns used this activity as a way to help students to gain a better understanding of Shakespeare and the theater, along with adding a little variety to his class.

"It gave me a new understanding of Shakespeare and the way things were done back then," said Tim McClintock, junior.

Getting the point across

Effective communication builds confidence

Communication is one of the most important aspects of our society. Several classes offered students the chance to improve their communication skills, such as listening, speaking, and writing, as well as bring them more in touch with their school and community.

"75 to 80 percent of all of a person's waking time is spent in acts where you are speaking and listening," said speech teacher Louise Alfrey. "Obviously, we should be training people how to be effective listeners and speakers."

One class which taught students how to speak effectively and think on their feet was Debate. The class itself was primarily geared towards preparing for debate tournaments in which the students competed. Students learned how to speak effectively, develop arguments, and research topics.

Speech and Drama also improved speaking skills. By giving different types of speeches, students in Speech 1 learned how to speak in front of a large group of people and also how to communicate with one, a few, or many people. Radio broadcasting was a new unit introduced to help voice training. Students wrote up newscasts and radio dramas and then broadcast them as if they were on the radio.

Acting skills were refined in Drama through various scenework and characterization studies and the use of voice and movement.

"Any drama class should make you more aware of yourself and confident as a person because you perform in front of an audience," said teacher Carol Svoboda.

Making students aware of community issues, policy changes, and school events was the job of the Clarion newspaper, which came out every two to three weeks.

The addition of two Macintosh computers and a laser printer made meeting tight deadlines easier for both Clarion and Shield. The new computers enabled the staffs to set copy right on the computer, rather than having it done at PSAB.

Meeting deadlines turned Shield staffers into human computers, producing themes, stories, pages, and pictures. However, the effort was worth it because as editor Ed Pallesen said, "The neat thing about yearbook is people will keep it all their lives, and when they look through it, it will help them remember their high school days."

Journalism 1 Clarion

"Extra! Extra! Read all about it!" In this case, extra stood for the additional activity of producing a school paper in the Journalism 1 class. The J1 Clarion, which was published once a semester, gave the J1 classes a chance to experience what it was like to work on a newspaper, meet deadlines, and work with a large group of people. It also helped the students decide whether they wanted to apply for a position on the Clarion or Shield. In order to work on the yearbook or newspaper, a student was required to take Journalism 1 and then apply for a position on one of the two publications.

All the copy, layout, and the selling of advertising space was done by the J1 students. "It gives you a feeling of what it is like to publish something," said junior Kari Semmen, "and it's nice to have people read what you have produced." Semmen was the content editor for the J1 paper the first semester.

How it actually works

Science helps students in everyday living

Whether students took them simply to fill a requirement or to use them for a building block for future careers, science classes were an important staple to students' educations.

Due to a new UNL policy which required high school students to have two years of science, chemistry classes doubled in size, said chemistry teacher Joe Dappen. Along with increased enrollment, two new classes were added to the science department, Consumer Chemistry and Biology 2-A, both of which had high enrollment.

Consumer Chemistry, a year-long class, was intended for students who wouldn't go on to take college chemistry, but still wanted to take a chemistry class. It involved learning about chemical processes and using practical chemistry for around a kitchen or household.

Biology 2-A was a new class that started second semester. "It's intended for people who are especially interested in biology," said Dappen. The same topics were covered as in regular biology, only more in depth.

The purpose of regular biology, according to teacher Gerry Saunders, was "to help students become aware of the intricacies and diversities of life." First semester dealt with general topics such as genetics and cells. Second semester broadened into the diversity of life.

"I try to teach an enthusiasm for sciences in general," said chemistry and physics teacher Jon Pederson. "I hope that chemistry can be fun at times." Pederson said that to make chemistry more fun and easier to understand, he placed more emphasis on demonstrations and class participations.

Physics was often taken if a person had a deep interest in a career in science or medicine. "I took physics because it pertains to what I'm going to go into in college, which is pre-med," said senior Melissa Borman.

The class dealt with mechanics, light, sound, heat, and electricity.

"Physics broadens your understanding of the world around you by applying to everyday life," said Pederson.

"Alive and Satisfied"

Madagascar hissing cockroaches and hermit crabs probably weren't the first choices if one wanted to raise a living organism. However, these creatures, along with salamanders, ants, fish, night crawlers, and good old houseplants thrived in several biology classes thanks to "tender loving care" dished out by biology students.

The reason for raising these small-scale zoos was called "Alive and Satisfied". Taught by teachers Gerry Saunders and Tim Golden, Alive and Satisfied was a semester unit within Biology 1.

The project was the focal point for many general topics covered first semester. Observations were made of the organisms' growth, behavior, and actions and were then applied to the different biology units, such as general self-structure and chemistry.

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Not just playing around

Groups and individuals receive honors

"We're aiming to make good music, not to win contests," said director Bob Krueger.

Despite this, many awards and honors were earned by groups as well as individuals in the instrumental music program.

Under Krueger's leadership, the marching band received superior ratings at both the Harvest of Harmony and the Nebraska State Bandmasters Association marching contests. They also performed in the second annual Star-City Parade, which was held in downtown Lincoln in December.

The symphonic band, a second-semester concert band that was more select than the marching band, had previously received a superior rating at the 1986 Worlds of Fun Festival of Bands, and planned to go again in 1987.

In addition, the 75-piece symphonic band "received a superior rating, the sight-reading trophy, and the sweepstakes trophy as best band at the 1986 Lincoln All-City contest," said Krueger, "a sweep of all the awards."

Symphonic Band was planning to perform again at the All-City contest. Even before second semester began, Krueger was having the band sight-read several pieces to find ones with potential.

Preparations were also being made to perform at the 1987 NSBA convention - Southeast was one of two high schools in the state invited.

Symphonic Band was also invited to perform at the International Youth and Music Festival in Vienna, Austria in the summer of 1987, but they didn't have the funds to go.

Also honored were several Symphonic Band and Orchestra members. Just a few of these individuals included: junior Chris Ellenwood, who was first chair clarinet in All-State Orchestra; senior Scott Rademacher, who played his tenor sax in both the McDonald's All-American Band and Jazz Band; senior Kayl Soukup, who was the state Music Teachers' National Association music contest winner in the strings division; and senior Dana Meinke, who was principal bassoon of World Youth Symphony and winner of Lincoln Youth Symphony's concerto competition.

Marching Band Camp

Practicing intensely during the last few weeks of summer was not only done by several athletic teams, but also by Marching Band.

Band members met two weeks before school started, working eight hours a day the first week, three hours a day the second.

Director Bob Krueger said the purpose of Band Camp was "basically to try to learn all the fundamentals [of marching], get the chops back in shape after the summer, learn all the contest music, and begin to learn the choreography."

To get a head start, both the flag corps, which was new this year, and the drumline met an additional week before the rest of the band met.

"Band Camp is a lot more fun than people think it would be," said junior Mitch Parker, drum major, "but I'm glad it doesn't last any longer than it does."

VOCAL MUSIC

Studying Singing

Vocal groups have different music styles

There were seven vocal music groups at Southeast. Five of the groups were selective. When students auditioned for a vocal music group, they sight read, were tested on note memory, and did scales. Also, the teacher played a chord for them, and they had to pick out the notes. Sometimes students needed a prepared piece to sing.

Ars Nova Coro consisted of 18 boys and girls who were juniors and seniors. Ars Nova Coro sang jazz and swing. "We do a few variations of where we stand and a few hand movements," said junior Lisa Hansen.

Countesses and Noblemen were made up of 14 juniors and seniors. "We sing jazz, swing, pop and ballads. We also use a lot of choreography," said senior Brent Kuenning.

"I decided to try out for Countesses and Noblemen because I heard it was the best group. However, the group is very hard to get into," Kuenning said. By February, Countesses and Noblemen had been to one contest, which they won. It was the Peru State Swing Choir Contest.

Court Choir consisted of 78 juniors and seniors. "I wanted to be in Court Choir because it looked like a fun group to be in," said junior Mandy Berry.

Court Choir sang madrigal, spiritual, and jazz music. "We sang at the Capitol with Dawes Elementary School for Martin Luther King's birthday," said Berry Mixed Chorus had 35 people in it. They sang a wide variety of music, including foreign pieces. "I took Mixed Chorus because it was the only singing group besides Countesses and Noblemen that would fit in my schedule," said junior Mike Works.

Queen's Court was an all-girls singing group of 16 seniors and juniors. "We sang madrigal, pop, and jazz," said junior Lisa Schwendiman.

Knight Sounds was another select vocal group. They sang pop, jazz, and showtunes. Knight Sounds was made up of 18 sophomore boys and girls. When they performed, they added choreography to their singing. "I tried out for Knight Sounds and I made it," said sophomore Janeen Jorgensen. "I like music and I think Knight Sounds is fun."

Knightengales consisted of 20 sophomore girls. They sang show tunes and pop music. They also used choreography.

Individual voice lessons

Many students at Southeast didn't know it, but singing lessons were offered to anyone who was interested. The lessons were private and the only requirement was that the person must have been committed to working. Tim Sharer, vocal music instructor, said, "The individual is contracted to work through the process of becoming a better singer."

Sharer said he felt they could help a person by bettering their musical techniques and developing an understanding of musical expression. The lessons also helped strengthen ear training because "music is more than just opening your mouth with the right sound. You have to hear the sound the right way," Sharer said.

Voice lessons also gave students self-confidence. "You need self-confidence to perform," Sharer said.

Sharer said, "You shouldn't be afraid to sing, because I can help you get better. If you think you would like to sing, get involved!"

A world of new words

New college requirements raise enrollment

"We are doing a lot more activities where students have to talk to each other," said Kathie Uhrmacher, head of the foreign language department.

Uhrmacher said that the foreign language department spent more time emphasizing the importance of speaking the language, rather than just writing it or listening to it.

Junior Audrey Hansen took German. Hansen said that their class did a lot of oral activities. One time, they set up simulated shops and were each given a specific amount of money. Then, they had to go to the different shops and ask for things in German.

Hansen added that they emphasized the grammar aspect of the German language as well.

"It's like taking a grammar class, but it's in German," said Hansen.

The foreign language department also experienced a large increase in its enrollment.

"A lot more kids are starting to take foreign language," said Pat Brown, Spanish teacher.

Brown said the reason for this was because of the change in college requirements. Most colleges wanted students to have four years of a foreign language, and it was much "easier and cheaper" on a high school level, said Brown.

Brown said she was glad there was an increased enrollment, but she wanted students to take the classes because they "enjoy and appreciate the language" and not just to fulfill college requirements.

Besides filling some college requirements, foreign language classes helped students in other school-related areas.

Brown stated that it was important to her that her students "see the language as a useful tool" in developing thinking skills for all classes.

Uhrmacher said that taking a foreign language class helped students do better in memorization, with their study skills, and in English courses.

Along with improving these skills in her students, Uhrmacher said she planned to bring in the art, music and architecture of the countries being studied.

Uhrmacher said that it was important to learn a foreign language, but it was just as important to be exposed to the cultural contributions the foreign countries have made to the world.

A new addition to the foreign language department was AFS teacher Cecilia Cortes, from Monroy, Chile. She assisted Olga Prendes during second semester.

Languages can be confusing at times. Here junior Lea Hartman talks to teacher Patricia Brown about her Spanish assignment.

NEW LABS

Students in Jane Reinkordt's German 7 class listen to the new lab equipment, which was just installed this year.

New language labs

An "approach towards oral proficiency" was how Kathie Uhrmacher described the new addition to the foreign language department.

Three lab systems were installed. One was given to each respective language class (German, French, and Spanish), but the language classrooms without systems could set up times to use one whenever it was necessary.

Uhrmacher said that this new addition helped enforce the concept of making students capable of communicating in a foreign language.

She added that, in past years, learning to read and write a foreign language were stressed. She planned to start moving away from that, and teach students to speak more.

The labs lowered from the ceiling, providing each student with a headset for listening. Recordings of native speakers, music, and news were some of the materials used.

New algebra course gives students option

"Whether people realize it or not, math is something they will use for the rest of their lives, whether it's just to balance their checkbooks or something else," said geometry teacher Diane Davis. The students "may as well take advantage of the opportunity to learn it now."

Southeast offered opportunities to learn math at a variety of levels, from basic to advanced classes.

Algebra 1-2 was an introduction to algebra, which included working with variables, solving simple equations and inequalities, and graphing and solving linear equations with more than one variable.

The next level after Algebra 1-2 was Geometry 1-2. Davis described Geometry as a class designed to "teach people to use a logical thought process." One of Davis' goals in teaching the class was to get people to be able to "think through a problem logically and to be able to apply it to everyday life."

After Geometry was Algebra 3-4. This class picked up where Algebra 1-2 left off. It went into more depth and discussed algebraic concepts.

A new class offered was Algebra 3-4T. This class, explained counselor Art Hillman, was designed for students who had considerable difficulty in math. It also was a way for college-bound students who didn't plan to take Pre-calculus to earn enough math credits.

The class was, as Hillman described it, "the brainchild of George Eisele." He thought up the class, planned it, and taught it. The class was over a year in the works.

Pre-calculus was the next step after Algebra 3-4. Pre-calculus teacher Harold Baker capsulized the class as "an integrated course of trigonometry and analytical geometry."

For the students who wanted to continue their educations in the mathematics field, Advanced Placement Calculus was offered. It was the most advanced math class offered and was taught at a college level.

Another new addition to the math department was teacher Shiela Kellenbarger. Kellenbarger, who transferred from Pound Junior High, taught Algebra 1-2. She said that at the high school level "some of the subject matter is more fun to teach. The level is a little bit higher and the kids are a bit more sophisticated...I think it was really enjoyable to come over and see some of my former students and see them grow up."

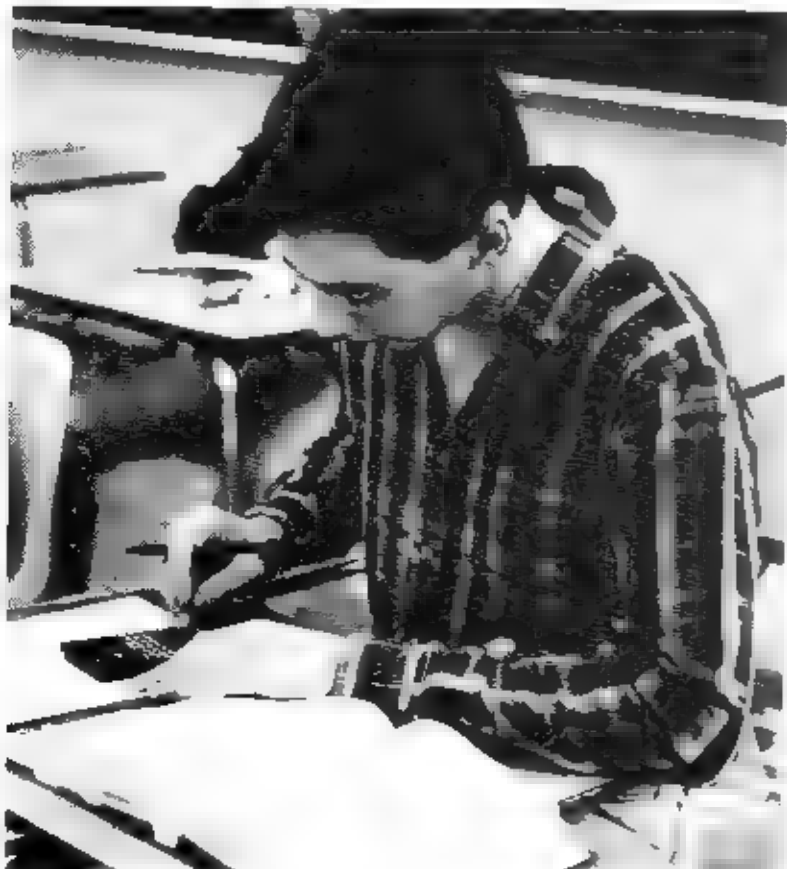

-Christine Hemmer

MATH CHAT

Giving a little extra help is something any teacher is willing to do. Harold Baker, during an Algebra 3 class, explains an assignment to juniors Kristina Niemeyer and Lana Gifford.

PERPLEXING PROBLEM

Junior Jason Firestone tries working out his assignment in Karen Ward's fifth period pre-calculus class.

BRAIN MACHINE

PENCILS READY

Concentration is a key factor in tackling a mathematics class. Students in Dan Dougherty's seventh period class follow along with the notes on the board.

Blackboard bonanza

It has been said that all a math teacher needed was a blackboard and chalk to teach. Whether or not that was true, geometry teacher Diane Davis said the blackboard was very important to a math teacher. "In fact, we just had a longer one put in my room." The other blackboard was not long enough for all of Davis' notes and explanations.

Some teachers, such as algebra teacher Judy Bogle, required student boardwork. Students were required to work through problems on the board at least twice a quarter.

Students reacted differently to math teachers' frequent use of their blackboards. Junior Brad Nilson said that all the boardwork didn't bother him; it helped him see how the problems should be worked.

Learning living skills

Home Economics offers more than cooking

The classes offered in the Home Economics department covered such topics as rearing children, human behavior, nutrition, and living independently.

"I took Exploring Childhood because I love kids," said senior Sandy Slagle. "We learned how to care for kids and to treat them equally."

"We go to different nursery and elementary schools and teach the kids. Sometimes we color with them or fingerprint," Slagle said.

Slagle said she felt this class was an important one. "I think this class is important because it can help me later on in life with my own kids."

During second and third period, the Exploring Childhood classes held a nursery school. They also took field trips to different nursery and elementary schools.

The Independent Living classes visited apartments and had guest speakers.

The Human Behavior classes had guest speakers, discussing such family crises as rape and child abuse. They also had a "baby day" where students brought their younger brothers and sisters to school.

The Relationships classes visited hospital birthing rooms and invited speakers to class. They also participated in a simulated marriage project, went to grocery stores to price foods, and visited funeral homes.

The Foods 1 and 2 classes prepared food and studied nutrition. Around Thanksgiving and Christmas, they prepared a full holiday dinner.

Also, the Home Economics department added a new class, Teenage Pregnancy. This was an independent study class for pregnant girls. Bryan Memorial Hospital designed the class, and the school district gave Southeast a grant for it.

Herbster said she thought that Teenage Pregnancy was very important to adolescent girls.

"This class is like a moral support group for the girls," Herbster said. "They can help each other by discussing their problems and sharing new ideas."

The class also helped the girls by providing someone who would listen to them.

"I know the girls have made good friends from this class," Herbster added. "I hope they can all stay friends. It helps them later on after their baby is born."

Married for one week

Students got married and received school credit for it...when they participated in the marriage simulation projects in their Relationships classes.

The students chose their partners and were "married" for one week. The couples made various decisions together such as dealing with finances, housing, and parenting.

If a couple decided to become parents, they were given a fish or an egg for a "child". The couples took complete responsibility for the care of their "children". If they had to go somewhere, they found a "babysitter", or the "child" went with them.

"I thought getting married was fun," said senior Ann Kozak, "but carrying my baby around was a pain."

Careers get boost from business classes

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS!! To many people, this rude response came after a nosy person had asked too many questions. However, in the Southeast business classes, minding, or running, one's own business was just one of a wide variety of subjects taught to budding entrepreneurs.

Personal Finance was usually the first or only business class people took. "It's basically a survival course so students don't get swindled in the marketplace," said teacher Ann Woita. Personal Finance was a required class that taught students how to prepare income tax returns and also dabbled in areas of employment, credit, investments, advertising, banking, insurance, contracts, and taxes.

Several marketing classes were also available. Marketing 1 involved learning about planning, pricing, placing, and promoting products.

"I got interested in marketing because my dad is a marketing professor," said junior Holly Grossbart. "I hope to be a buyer or wholesaler, and this class gives me a basic idea of what it's about."

Marketing 3 looked at things from a management perspective. "Marketing 1 is good for everyone, but you have to be interested in a business career to take Marketing 3," said teacher Carole Johnson.

Students in their second year of marketing had the option of participating in Marketing Internship. By having a job and getting on-the-job training, students received 10 credit hours.

Accounting 1 and College Accounting were taught to help students manage their business and personal records. Learning about the accounting cycle, payroll, and depreciation was part of Accounting 1. Students also participated in a business simulation where they simulated one month's worth of business activities, such as making journal entries and writing checks and financial reports.

College Accounting dealt with budgets, manufacturing, and financial ratios. "The class covers in five or six weeks what Accounting 1 would cover in a year," said Woita. "Anyone who is interested in business administration should take accounting."

Guilty or innocent?

Nolo contendere, ipso facto, corpus delecti, habeas corpus. To many students, these words were incomprehensible. But, to lawyers, witnesses, judges, and juries, each of these Latin roots held significant meaning in a court of law.

Ann Woita's two Business Law classes got a taste of the law world when they held a mock trial concerning a man's possession of drugs. The Business Law students acted as attorneys and witnesses, and an actual attorney presided as judge.

The trial took about two to two and a half weeks to prepare, and it was videotaped during the actual presentation. Both classes reached a verdict of guilty.

"A trial is like a sporting event. You have an offense and a defense, and you want to come out the winning side," said Woita.

ART Creativity for a grade

Art department one of Nebraska's best

"Southeast has the best [art department] in the city and probably in the state," said jewelry instructor Gerald Christiansen. "We have the biggest department, and we get a lot of student support. We also have a larger number of classes, and the offerings are more advanced."

No new classes were added to the department. As in the previous year, sixteen different art classes were offered.

Design 1-2 was a class in which students studied art fundamentals in painting and drawing. Later, students studied fundamentals in pottery, sculpture, jewelry, and other related areas.

Two pottery courses were offered, Pottery 1-2 and Pottery 3-4. In Pottery 1-2, basic hand-building and glazing techniques were taught. Students also worked on improving their skills using a potter's wheel, and they learned about 3-D design. Pottery 3-4 was a continuation of Pottery 1-2.

If someone wanted to learn about fabrics and what could be done with them, he or she could have taken a fibers class. Fibers 1-2 explored stitchery and hand-weaving. One could also have learned about dyeing and batik techniques.

Fibers 3-4 was a continuation of Fibers 1-2, which went into more depth and eventually taught weaving on a loom for any interested students.

Two classes on jewelry were offered. Jewelry 1-2 taught the basics, and Jewelry 3-4 went into more depth about the processes used.

Sculpture 1-2 was a way for a student to learn about how to make molds and how to carve in a variety of media. Advanced Sculpture 3-4 emphasized individual skills and design development.

Drawing techniques and materials were explained in Drawing 1-2 and were further explored in Drawing 3-4.

Painting 1-2 explored acrylic, watercolor, and tempera paints. For students who wanted to study another year, Painting 3-4 was available.

For students interested in graphic design and related areas, there was Commercial Art 1-2.

And, for those interested in cameras and picture-taking, Beginning Photography and Advanced Photography were available. Topics ranged from operating a camera and developing film to more sophisticated concepts and applications.

Lost wax technique

One of the ways jewelry students could have made a piece of jewelry was to use the "lost wax" method.

A student would first make a wax model of the desired piece of jewelry. Then, he would add a tube of wax to this mold by attaching one end of it to the wax model and the other end to a pour-cup (a funnel-like instrument).

This contraption would then be placed in a solution similar to plaster. It would then be put in a burn-out kiln and heated to over 1000 degrees. At this temperature, the wax would melt and leave a mold of the jewelry. Through the pour-cup, the metal of which the jewelry was to be made would be poured into the mold.

Next, the mold would be put in a vacuum-cast machine which would "suck the air out and suck the metal into it," said jewelry instructor Chuck Schanou.

Improvement's the key

Industrial Arts, Driver's Ed. make changes

"Change" was the word used to describe the Industrial Arts and Driver's Education departments.

The Industrial Arts department added a new class to its curriculum. It was the cabinet-making class, and teacher Jim Kinney said it was "a really good success." The main project of the class was making ice boxes, which they sold to the public.

There were more girls interested in industrial arts, and Kinney said he thought the reason was that they wanted to "feel more self-sufficient."

Roxy Janikowski, a senior who took Basic Car Care, said that there were only four boys in her class. She reasoned that there were more girls than boys "because guys know more about basic car care and they don't need the basics."

Janikowski said she took the class because she wanted "to learn about cars."

This year, Driver's Education "went to individual classes instead of large groups," said teacher Gail Baum. He said the change was made so that the students could get more credit hours.

Driver's Education used to be a double-period class; there was one period for the classroom portion and another period for the driving and simulator part of the class. With the new system, the student could get both classroom and driving/simulator all in one period. That way, the student could take another class and could earn more credit hours.

There were many reasons students took Driver's Education. Sophomore Chris Thompson said he took it so he could get lower insurance rates.

The state cut down the lab section of the class, lowered the number of student hours in the class, and cut the driving time in half, Baum said. For driving, instead of having eight times behind the wheel, the student only got four. Baum said he was disappointed with this because "students could use more practice."

Despite all the cuts in funding for the class, Baum said, "We did a better job with the cut-down hours than we thought we would."

Even with half the driving time of other years, Thompson said he would remember one important thing about driving. "I'll remember how to stop."

Lincoln High exchange

The Industrial Arts department offered students a wider variety of classes by using a "vocational delivery system"

The system was a chance for students to be bussed to Lincoln High for classes that the Southeast Industrial Arts department did not offer Southeast students were given access to classes such as Advanced Electronics, Advanced Machine Drafting, and Residential Construction. Lincoln High students could come to Southeast for the new, double-period cabinet making class.

Jim Kinney, who taught the cabinet-making class, said the only problem with the vocational delivery system was with the bussing, because it was not convenient for the students. "[They] don't like to leave at 7:30 [to go to Lincoln High]"

Students work to be healthy inside and out

Whether you preferred Body Toning, Weight Training, Triathletics, Water Games or Team Sports, you could have taken these courses, and more, in the wonderful world of physical education at Southeast

Although only two quarters of physical education taken in two separate years were required, "most of the students take many more [gym classes] than they have to...it's a stress releaser, and it's a social outlet," said Mimi Kuebler, gym teacher

An additional reason to take extra gym classes may have been the active instruction. "All of our instructors are energetic, and they participate in the activities instead of just throwing a ball in and telling students what to do," Kuebler said.

She added that, in order to be enthusiastic, she had to be "kind of corny sometimes."

Kuebler also said that since the track in the John Prash Activity Center was available, the body toning classes used it once a week to enhance cardiovascular endurance. The pool was also used more often, the toning classes used it several times during the quarter.

"I'd like to have the pool be used every period if we could," said J.R. Connell, physical education instructor.

This year was unusual, Kuebler said, because there were more males in Body Toning.

Mark Rippe, a senior in Body Toning, said he liked being in the class because "it's different and a lot of fun. You are constantly moving for 40 minutes, which builds endurance."

Unlike Heather Loske, sophomore in Weight Training who said, "It's embarrassing to be [one out of two girls] in weightlifting...[because] everyone makes fun of you," Rippe said it did not really bother him that there were many more girls in his class.

The options for students wanting to participate in intramural sports included basketball, bowling and co-ed softball. Kuebler said the intramural program for girls died down because they were more involved in athletics.

Gym classes were quarter classes for 2.5 credits. Along the same line, students who hadn't passed the Health Waiver Examination were required to take one quarter of health for 2.5 credits. During the quarter, students learned how to perform CPR, and studied units about nutrition and first-aid.

Teachers for a day

"And one, and two...all right, keep it moving!"

This was the atmosphere of Mimi Kuebler's body toning classes when her students were presenting their routines.

One of Kuebler's teaching techniques was to have the students put a tape together and organize a lesson which was presented in class. Kuebler said one of the reasons she did that was so the students had more empathy for the instructor, and so they would remember correct exercise routines.

"Before presenting in front of the class, I was pretty nervous," sophomore Jenny Ortiz said.

"Afterwards, I was relieved," she said, "but if I had to do it again, it would be no problem."

Meeting all the needs

Classes offered to both ends of spectrum

Southeast offered programs which met the needs of students from the "special needs students" to the "highly gifted".

David Caudy, head of the Special Needs department at Southeast, said that programs were available to students who qualified as "special needs".

There were programs for the hearing impaired, the educable mentally handicapped, and the speech/language impaired.

Along with these programs, services were available to the students. Qualifying students were provided with interpreters, aides, tutors, and resource assistants.

"A large percentage of these students are successfully mainstreamed into other classes," said Caudy.

Caudy also stated that there were services available at the college level. He said that the UNI had begun a Learning Disabilities Program similar to Southeast's.

Services were also available for the gifted and highly gifted students as well.

Ted Larson, head of the gifted program at Southeast, said that students qualified for the gifted program by meeting certain criteria.

The criteria could be met by scoring high on achievement and IQ tests, being nominated by a parent or staff member, or showing high quality work.

"There are some things IQ tests can't measure," said Larson.

Students qualified as gifted or highly gifted had various options available to them at Southeast. They could enroll in college classes with the school paying for tuition and text, or they could be provided with a mentor to assist them in their studies.

AP classes were also available to any student who preferred a college type of class setting.

Larson said that the term AP (advanced placement) meant that the class was set up under certain guidelines. The class was to "prepare high school students with college level experience," said Larson.

At the end of the year, AP students were able to take an AP exam for college credit.

MEET THE TEST

Stress at Southeast apparently rises as an AP Calculus test approaches. Here, fifth period Calculus students concentrate on one of Leonard Nickerson's examinations.

MULTIMEDIA MADNESS

AP History term paper

Every year Ted Larson's AP History classes were assigned term papers.

Larson gave the assignment on the first day of school, and it wasn't due until the middle of December. The paper had to be at least ten pages typed.

Lori Goin, junior, said that she went through various steps in order to complete her term paper on time.

She started out at the library, searching for research and important information. Then she said she sifted through her notes and put her thoughts onto paper. She used a computer to type up her paper.

"The experience of writing a term paper helped prepare me for college and to be disciplined in meeting deadlines," said Goin.

Lending a helping hand

Administration offers students assistance

"We view as the most important thing serving our students. It's what we're here for," said counselor Janet Millnitz.

The administration served and counseled students in many ways through various programs.

Counselors worked with students the most as compared to other administration positions. Don Darnell, Assistant Principal of Student Services, described a counselor as "someone who wore many, many hats."

Some of these hats were that of friend, suggester of alternatives, post-high school planner, and academic assister, said Millnitz.

But counselors weren't just there for the kids. Millnitz said she recalled occasions that she spoke to the parents and to teachers who had concerns regarding a student.

"Mrs. Millnitz is a great counselor," said senior Brent Kuenning. "In the last three years, she's inspired me. She helped me pick quality college-prep classes."

The assistant principals played major roles in the services offered to students.

Darnell was one such assistant principal. His job was to supervise the counseling and guidance programs. He was responsible for duties such as keeping student records, publishing the "Knightlife Banner", and setting up the schedule for visits from college representatives.

Assistant Principal of Instruction, Rex Mercer, did not deal with students directly very often, but he worked behind the scenes. He did such things as scheduling classes, administering department budgets, and organizing the distribution of student schedules. He also ordered instructional supplies, materials, and equipment.

Vice Principal Larry Eaton handled all the discipline of students, the maintenance and upkeep of the building, and the use of the building through the master calendar. He said that his hope was to motivate students in a positive way.

"I want people to say, 'Mr. Eaton's a fair man,'" he said.

Principal Wesley Lauterbach was the ringleader of all this activity. He was responsible for the overall operations of the school.

Intervention program

One of the counseling programs offered to students was the School/Community Intervention Program (SCIP).

SCIP coordinator John Larsen described SCIP as a "referral program to identify students that might have some type of drug or alcohol problem."

Larsen said that occasionally a student would come to see him and describe the problem of a "friend" when the problem was actually that of the student himself.

When comparing the entire student body to the number of students in SCIP, the percentage was small, but, Larsen said, "if you can help one...it's worthwhile."

"A lot of students at Southeast think the purpose of the SCIP program is to catch people," Larsen added, "but the purpose is to help people."

Full of Activity

Club activities benefit social lives

In terms of sheer numbers of people involved, club activities of one kind or another probably ranked as the biggest extracurricular commitment at Southeast. New groups of people, changing organizations, and new ideas all contributed to the exciting and often surprising atmosphere surrounding club activities.

Senior Stephanie Feistner, president of French Club, said clubs involved a great deal of time, especially if one was very active.

"I'm also in Pep Club and Speech/Debate, so there is always something going on that you can attend, if you have the time," she said.

Junior Brenda Jirovsky, who belonged to Shirettes, Ski Club, French Club, and Court Choir, echoed Feistner's sentiments.

"Before every performance we have to go to school early for Shirettes. Plus, we have to actually do the performance," she said. "Sometimes people don't realize it, but there is a great deal of time involved," she said.

Student Council and French Club member Charlie Calhoun, a sophomore, said, "It's true that clubs take time, so you have to be cognizant of those demands and balance them against other commitments, like schoolwork, or else you're behind before you know what hit you. It can be a very insidious process."

"Nevertheless," he said, "it's a blast. I feel like we get things accomplished and have fun at the same time."

"It's very important to be involved in some way," Feistner said. "Clubs are an excellent way to learn something about an area, meet new people, be creative, and eventually help organize other people and events."

To be an officially school-sponsored club, a group must have received Student Council and Administration approval. New groups were added routinely.

In StuCo, we approved the Athletics club, and it was no problem. But when the 'Buddahs' - a group of guys concerned about school spirit - applied for a charter, we agreed, but the administration thought they duplicated Pep Club's efforts," Calhoun said. "I think the guys were surprised they can still be an organization, just not a school one - pursuant to Article Eight, Section Two of the StuCo constitution."

Dozen of clubs existed with different aims. Whether it was an academic club, sports club, service club, entertaining club, or something else, in general, the club experience was similar in many ways.

"Every group has objectives, leadership, activities, and members. And, ideally, all clubs have fun in one way or another," Jirovsky said. "If you're not involved, I think you miss out."

This year, involvement and interest were the rule. Our year was the more exciting and fun for it.

Southeast's spirit and support of its athletes and school was shown throughout the year by a variety of clubs and groups.

Pep Club was one of those spirit groups. It consisted of cheerleaders, Shirettes, and any interested sophomores and juniors.

Junior Jane Peters, president of Pep Club, performed several behind-the-scenes jobs to get Pep Club organized and spirited.

Peters made presentations at various junior highs to get them interested in Pep Club. She was also in charge of Homecoming, enforcing Pep Club rules, and representing Pep Club in student elections.

"The purpose of Pep Club is to encourage school spirit, promote good sportsmanship, and serve Southeast at all times," said junior Mindy Berry, Pep Club vice president.

Along with promoting school spirit, Pep Club members had the opportunity to try out for positions as a Pep Club officers, cheerleaders, or Shirettes.

Peters said that members had to earn a certain number of points to try out. Points were earned by attending sport events and rallies and by participating in Spirit Week. Members also had to decorate for Homecoming and make signs for the sporting events.

"Pep Club officers, cheerleaders, and Shirettes must also earn as many points as the other members of the Pep Club," said Peters.

Another group that supported the school and its athletes was the cheerleaders.

"The cheerleaders have made up a lot of new cheers, chants, and a new dance in hopes that people will cheer with us or will get into the game," said senior Steph Feistner, varsity captain.

Spirit events, such as pep rallies, were organized and planned by the cheerleaders. Feistner said they started planning two or three weeks in advance by brainstorming.

"In order to raise money for the pep rallies and their uniforms, the cheerleaders held a Pajama Jam, sold mugs, Homecoming flowers, raffle tickets, and lollipops," said junior Mary McGreer, JV captain.

The cheerleading squad had a major setback this year. The School Board passed an order that high school cheerleaders could not perform mounts.

"We worked very hard, had fun, and best of all, we were all good friends," said Feistner.

The Shirettes provided entertainment during half time at home football and basketball games.

Cherise Grimmit, senior and co-captain of the Shirettes, said they prepared for their routines during first period every day.

Pep groups cooperate to encourage support for athletes

The Shirettes also attended a summer clinic to get new ideas for the year.

"Rules were set up and enforced in order to get people to practice on time," said senior Heidi Schwendiman, captain of the Shirettes.

The drill team added a new group to a few of its practices during February - the Lincoln High Pomalinks.

"We are performing with the Lincoln High drill team for the Lincoln High vs Southeast games," said Schwendiman.

Another very important group in spreading school spirit was the pep band.

"Pep band keeps the spirit and intensity up after the team starts playing," said junior Mitch Parker, drum major.

"The pep band is made up of Marching Band people from the beginning of the year. There is no set practice time. They just show up and play," said Parker.

Besides playing at football and basketball games, the pep band performed at pep rallies.

A new group was added to the marching band this year - the flag corps.

The flag corps consisted of 14 girls who tried out at the end of last year. They performed along with the marching band during half time at home football games.

"I enjoyed Flag Corps because it gave me a chance to support my school and to get more involved in school activities," said senior Julie Doner.

Another highlight to the marching band performances was feature twirler Deb Javorsky, senior.

"I really enjoyed working with the band because they were an understanding group of people," said Javorsky. "They were really supportive during performances and competitions."

And last, but not least, a group called the "Buddahs" (sic) graced Southeast's games with their own peculiar chants and cheers.

Senior Jeff Fitchett, founder of the Buddahs, said it all started when he received a package containing a Buddha doll. Fitchett was from then after called "Buddah".

His nickname eventually became his intramural basketball team's name. This Buddah group started attending various athletic events to show their support and school spirit.

"We - meaning senior guys - made up new chants, yelled as loud as possible, wore bandannas, and stood in front of the crowd yelling cheers," said Fitchett.

Fitchett said he felt as if "Buddahism" had reached its peak and was dying out. He said he would like it if the "Buddah" trend left Southeast when he and his friends graduate.

Teenage reps bridge gap between students, faculty

StuCo represented the student body and narrowed the communication gap in a variety of ways. In order to get input from students, StuCo members visited different classes to gather opinions, criticism, and ideas.

A popular opinion was that lunch should have been five minutes longer. StuCo members visited with school officials, other student councils, and Superintendent Philip Schoo in their attempts to get a longer lunch, but the proposal was turned down.

StuCo provided many services for school. "Every year, Student Council gives a gift to the school, such as free phones in the office, or the floor mats," said senior Katie Dimon.

Acting as a kind of "ratification board" was another duty of the members. "If a new club wants to get started, they must submit a constitution to Student Council for advice and approval, and then it goes to Mr. Eaton," said sophomore Chelsea Chelsen.

Along the same lines, if a requirement for Honor Roll or National Honor Society was changed, Student Council was informed so they could offer students' opinions about the change.

"It's a good chance to get your ideas across," said Dimon.

Other school services included holding fundraisers, such as providing a computer dating service in February and holding a dance.

StuCo also had an exchange program with other Lincoln high schools' student council members.

Community involvement included ringing bells for the Salvation Army during the holidays and collecting cans for the Malone Center.

Another representative body was the class officers. Each class had separate duties.

The senior class organized graduation and the senior barbeque. The officers were also responsible for planning future class reunions.

"Most of our activities revolve around the end of the year," said senior Marcus Baiters, vice-president.

The junior officers' biggest job was planning Prom. "We want to make Prom a special event of the whole school, because it is our main project," said junior Lisa Endacott.

"We serve as a representative for the sophomore class, and when there is a problem, I'm the voice," said sophomore Ted Wright about the sophomore class officers. "We are planning to go to the junior highs and answer questions about high school and warn the ninth graders to watch out for people like Tim Herman," Wright added jokingly.

STRAIGHT LEG

Clubs were a fun and popular way of getting to know people who had common interests. Some clubs were for fun, and some performed services, but all clubs got students involved in their community or school.

One of the just-for-fun clubs was Ski Club. "The purpose of the club was to allow kids to learn a new athletic experience that was supervised," said Ski Club sponsor Jim Kinney.

One club at Southeast that helped many people was Red Cross. Probably their biggest activity was sponsoring the Blood Drive. The members prepared food and helped operate the donating of blood.

One club that was considered a fun club was SynkraKnights. SynkraKnights was designed to teach advanced synchronized swimming skills to girls who were interested.

A club at Southeast that provided a big service to the democratic party was Young Democrats.

"The purpose of the club is to stimulate interest in politics and get people involved in carrying out that interest," said sponsor Tom Douglas.

One fun club that provided a service to your body was the Triathletics Club. "Triathletics provides students the opportunity to train and condition in a non-pressured atmosphere," said J R Connell, club sponsor.

S Club was an athletic club for any boy in an athletic sport.

"The purpose of the club is to promote school spirit and provide a service organization for the athletes," said club sponsor Doug Miller.

S Club sold programs at girls' basketball and volleyball games, helped with the state tournaments at Southeast, and sold t-shirts.

One club at Southeast that was a fun club was Students Staying Straight.

"The purpose of the club is for students to have a place to go on the weekends where they don't have to make the decision to drink or take drugs," said Mick Pierce, club sponsor.

The club made anti-drinking and drug posters to hang around school.

Outdoor Encounter was another fun club at Southeast.

"The purpose of Outdoor Encounter is to help kids grow and experience things they might not have the chance to experience," said Gary Saunders. "Our motto is to learn more about nature and ourselves."

Another service club was Student Republicans.

"I think the purpose of the club is to help get students involved in politics. You learn what politics can do for you," said senior David Schaaf.

Academic Clubs

Curriculum interests spark organizational involvement

There is no doubt that Southeast offered a variety of clubs which were suited to the students' individual tastes. Of these clubs, some appealed to the academic nature of the student.

Foreign language clubs were among the academic clubs offered. There were three such clubs offered: the French, Spanish, and German Clubs. These clubs provided students an opportunity to experience part of the culture they studied through parties such as the Bouillabaisse Party (a French Club party featuring fish soup) and the Fasching Party (a German Club costume party).

Junior Rob McClary said that what he liked most about the French Club was "the opportunity to meet so many people who take French." "Except the sophomores," he jokingly added.

Another facet of the academic clubs was the science and math oriented clubs. NOVA was a science club that met to discuss current news and developments in the science world. It also sponsored an annual field trip, this year going to the Fort Calhoun nuclear power plant outside of Omaha. Another such club was the Science Club. It was open to any student interested in the science field and attempted to carry out the aims of the program of the Science Clubs of America.

Math Club did more than discuss; they competed in contests. Students had the opportunity to compete in contests which demanded the use of their skills in mathematics. These contests were held throughout Nebraska.

Business clubs were also an extension of in-class interests. DECA (Distributive Education Clubs of America) and FBLA (Future Business Leaders of America) provided an outlet for these interests. FBLA was open to all students and encouraged students to take a greater interest in the business world through speakers and field trips. DECA was more geared toward the serious-minded business student and required a member to be enrolled in at least one business class. Both clubs enabled a member to enter competitions at the local, state, and national level.

Along a more artistic vein, Art Masters and Round Table allowed for the more creative stirrings in students. Art Masters "increases the awareness of art in our society," said junior Chris Ellenwood. Art Masters also held an exhibit at Haymarket Square in the spring.

Round Table was Southeast's creative writing club. It met to read and critique the writing of its members. McClary, secretary of Round Table, said that one of their major accomplishments for the year was the drafting of a club constitution.

No surprise: Knights top sports

"The most tangible reason for the high level of success in athletics at Southeast is the quality of our athletes," said Wally McNaught, Athletic Director. "When it comes to winning, talent is the most important factor."

This year Southeast continued to build upon its long tradition of excellence. To wit, Southeast won the Combined Omaha World Herald All-Sports trophy the last two years running, according to McNaught.

Sports provided a way to pursue athletics with a team and school teamwork, said sophomore Andy Bonness, a gymnast.

"Sports at Southeast are so much better than other teams because the team is so close," he said. "The whole team will go over to someone's house for dinner, for example. It's very supportive."

Senior wrestler Marcus Balters agreed. "Being on a team rages, because you can work for yourself, but also for the team," he said. "When you're in a tight match and you hear the whole team cheering, instead of just your mom, you get extra incentive."

Other benefits came from sports as well, according to junior Susan Brown, basketball player. "You learn to work with other people, self-discipline, how to make individual sacrifices, and general hard work," she said.

While the general level of talent was imperative to a winning performance, other factors applied as well. One of those factors was coaching.

"Winning depends on the coach," said Brown. Coach Janet MacNeil "has a totally different philosophy. She doesn't yell or punish you if you do bad. It works really well on our team. Everyone works all the harder because we know our coach is behind us."

A common, albeit often unintentional, side benefit of athletics was time management, McNaught said.

"Sure, practice and meets take up a lot of time," said Bonness. "But, unless you just decide to forget about school - in which case you probably can't play anyway - you are forced to study that much harder."

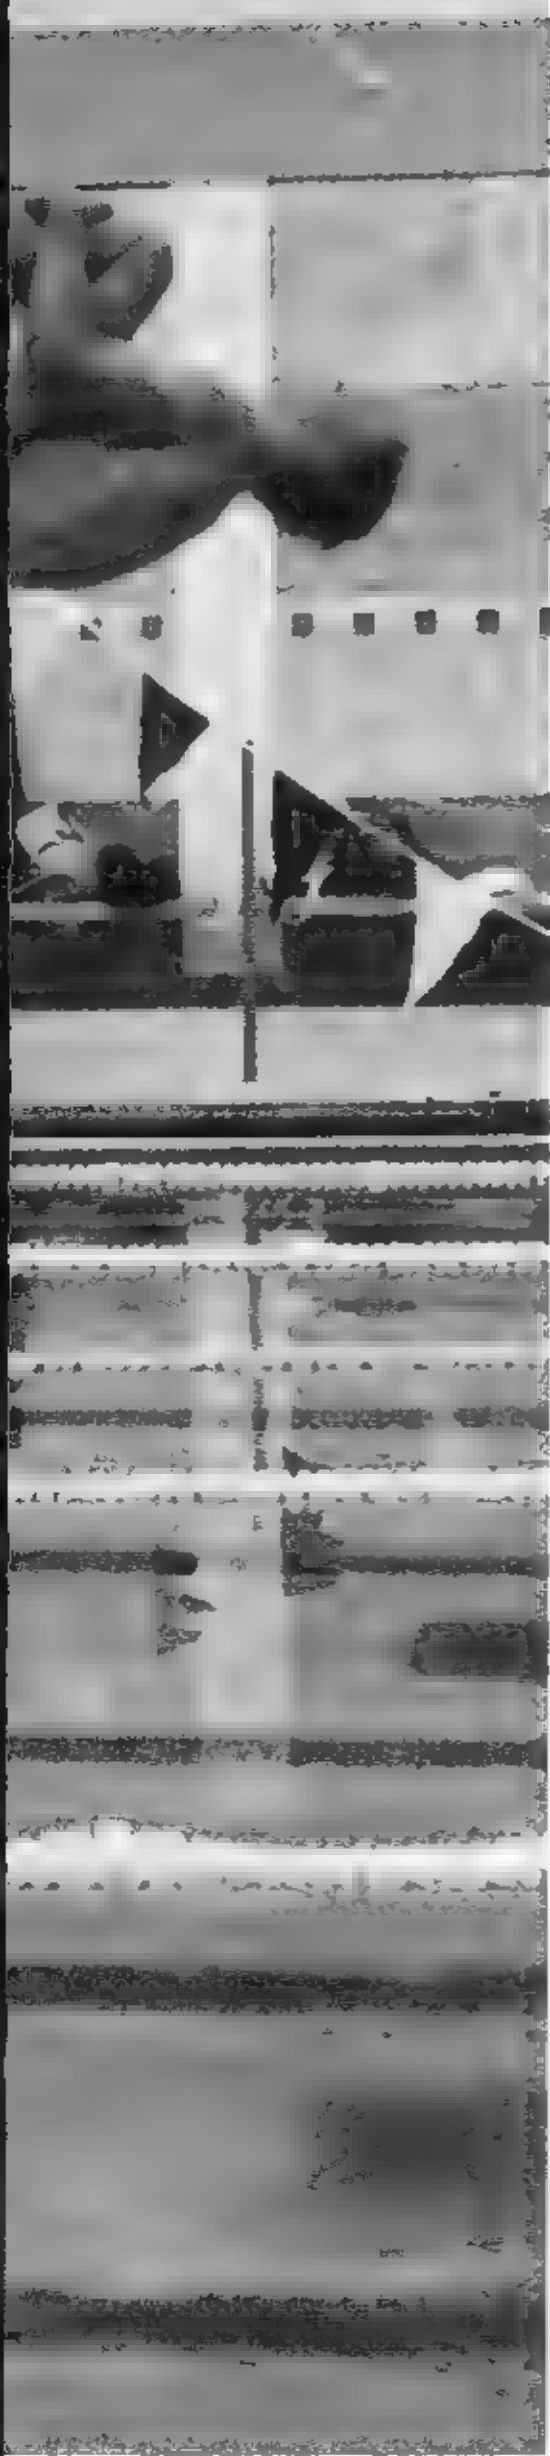

Whatever the reason, Southeast seemed to have found the proper mix to insure academic excellence.

"We always have about 50 All-City people, and a bunch of state titles," Balters said. "Now, with the addition of soccer as a varsity sport, we'll probably just get better."

All of the athletic staff, coaches, athletes, and fans, worked hard to keep Southeast's athletes on top and full of surprises.

Tournaments bring victories

"I think it's great having a lot of juniors," said junior T.J. Tipton, "We will be more experienced next year."

The varsity team was undefeated and they were city champs

The number one singles player was senior Todd Garcia, the number two singles player was sophomore Frank Hoppe. Senior Scott Neumeister and Tipton were the number one doubles team. The number two doubles team were sophomore Jack Cole and junior Chris Wanamaker Seeding was important in long tournaments. If a team member got a first or second seeding then he wouldn't have to meet his main competition until the semifinals or finals. This was an advantage because there is less chance of an upset occurring. These seedings were based entirely on season records, so schedules played an integral part.

The team practiced three or four times a week for about an hour during good weather. These practices consisted of drills and isolated practice on certain strokes, running, and match play

Challenge matches are important in team practice. To gain positions on the team, players competed against each other, and the winning person or doubles team moved ahead of the other. That also determined who got to participate in the upcoming meets. "Our team is really together this year, we all support everybody. Last year's team has had a few rivalries between members," said senior Pat Morrow

Going for the gusto at State

Expectations and spirits were high for the girls' golf team. "We wanted to win everything," said junior Kristine Hubka. "We thought we could if we worked hard enough."

The team came close to fulfilling their goal by placing first in every tournament except at a Crete match and at State, where they placed second.

"Even though State was a disappointment, we had a very good year," said Coach Dan Wolf.

Sophomore Angie Wilson had a personally good year. Wilson's score of 77 at State earned her the individual title for the second year in a row.

"At the time I didn't think about it. I was more concerned with the team's performance," said Wilson, "but it was an honor to win it two years in a row."

Preparation for the golf season started early. Practices began in mid-August and continued every day for about four hours once school started.

The extensive workouts paid off. The LSE Invite was highlighted as the tournament where everyone did their best. "The overall score of 359 was lowest in the four years I've coached," said Wolf. Wilson also shot her best personal score of 75.

An important factor which helped performance was the closeness of the team. "We had a lot of fun together and we all became extremely close," said Hubka.

"If one of us were having a bad day everyone would help them through it," said senior Shelley Donovan. "We were like sisters."

Cross country boys Championship taken at state meet

"It doesn't get any better than this" is the cross country team's logo for the year. This statement sums up the feelings about their team's "family", hard work, and good running, Coach Ted Larson said.

As usual, hard work and intense training were a big part of the boys' cross country team this year, said Larson, adding that many of the runners trained in the off-season.

Nate Nielsen, junior, was one of them. "I'm twice as good this year as I was last year because I trained in the summer," said Nielsen.

As well as intense training, the team had solid coaching. One unique thing that Coach Larson did for his team, as he did every year, is that he ran every workout with the team.

Assistant Coach John McCracken also ran with the team. McCracken was an unpaid volunteer who gave advice and encouraged the team, said Larson.

"I think the coaches are great," Nielsen said. "McCracken really pushed and motivated me. He always told me how good I could be if I really pushed myself."

To help the two coaches, the team elected two captains, seniors Jay Greathouse and Mike Johnson.

Johnson said he showed leadership as a captain by having a positive attitude and by encouraging others.

"State is what I train for," said Nielsen.

Nielsen's training paid off when he took first place individually at State. The whole boys' team also won first place at State and had four individuals finish in the top 20: Greathouse, Fleischli, Johnson, and senior Cory Hawk.

Cross country girls

Challenge provided by the Links

"Winning is important, but there's a lot more to sports and athletics than winning," said Ted Larson, cross country coach.

Our cross country team was noted for its successful seasons and for having the largest team in the state each year, said Larson.

This winning reputation, however, was not the only reason why Larson had so many runners each year, he said. Many went out for the team to be a part of a group, others wanted to lose weight, and still others may just have liked the sport itself.

"Running keeps me in good shape and helps me have a better attitude about life," said senior Lori Greathouse, team captain. She also said that running helped her stay more alert in school, which resulted in better grades.

Junior Yvette LaDuke also said she enjoyed running because it helped her stay in shape.

"I enjoy the team spirit and knowing that you're out there working as one unit," said junior Kathy Titsworth.

"I work, as a coach, very hard in trying to make everyone feel welcome and that they are part of the team," said Larson.

This encouragement may have attributed to the girls' success, but the team also had many "newcomers" who did well and gave the team depth, said Larson.

One of the "newcomers", Lori Focht, said she found that the team's unity and encouragement helped her do well in cross country.

The girls' team took second at State, and Jodi Stineman, Micaela O'Meara, and Nancy Devoogd finished in the top twenty.

Gymnastics, boys

Gallant efforts fall short

For the second year in a row, the girls' gymnastics team took a second place finish at State. The second place team consisted of Kelly Hoppe, Sheryl Kunza, Vicki Thimgan, Shannon Toalson, and Tammi Wolfe.

Thimgan took second in all-around and State champion in the floor and vault, and Tammi Wolfe took third in floor exercise.

The team got off to a good start by defeating Millard North in their first meet. They also did very well against the defending state champions, East, where they lost by only one point, 140-141.

In the Millard South Invite the girls team took first place. Some of the teams that participated were Northeast, Lincoln High, Omaha Westside, Papillion and Thomas Jefferson High from Council Bluffs, IA.

Getting psyched up for a meet is important in order to do a good job.

Practices are also important. "This is the first year we got to use our new foam pit," said Coach Ron Paulsen. "It has most definitely helped our practices. It's nice because now I don't have to spot a gymnast. They can work on the bars themselves and not worry about getting hurt."

However the team has had a few injuries. "I messed up my ankle, so I had to be careful," said Simon.

But luckily the injuries haven't hurt the team's record. At the Greater Nebraska Conference, Thimgan defeated East's Kristin Gutz for the all around title with a score of 37.35.

"I really like being on gymnastics and going to the meets. It gives you a chance to see other talent and meet new people," said Toalson.

Girls place second at State

Whether on the floor, pommel horse, or the parallel bars, the boys' gymnastics team showed their stuff.

The team ended the season with a mixed record "We haven't been hitting tricks as well as we should be," explained junior Dennis Rieke "We haven't really gotten it together."

Another contributing factor to the mixed record was the fact that the team scored about the same as last year, but the opponents' scores had improved greatly.

As the season progressed, the team scores improved for the most part.

"We're a lot better than when we started. As you spend time with people you get used to them," said senior Jared Nun.

The team had the opportunity to "get used to each other" in daily practices which lasted for approximately two and a half hours.

Practices gave the gymnasts the chance to work on exactly what they would be doing in competition. That included working on old and new tricks (a gymnastic movement - anything from a kick to a flyaway) and routines. In addition, they worked on individual strength for about 30 minutes at each practice.

Even though the gymnastics meets were based on individual participation, teamwork was important to help individuals excel, said Coach Ron Paulsen.

But more than good coaching is required to be a good gymnast, according to Nun. It takes "complete dedication and the guts to be able to have half a social life," he said.

Rieke added that it takes "determination, the willingness to put oneself out, the time, and the love of the sport."

Volleyball

Victory over East out of reach

"Volleyball has taught me many things - one is how to give. If you aren't willing to give to people, to get along with others, you'll never make it on a team," said senior Nicky White.

The varsity volleyball team learned a lot more than just the sport of volleyball. Sophomore Tracy List said that she learned how to get along and work with different people. She also said that the team was very close, and it helped them work together as a team.

"You have to work together to win, and you've got to have fun," said Kari Kussatz, senior.

Besides learning how to get along with their teammates, they learned strategies to use against their opponents.

They met one of their opponents, East High, five different times. "Every time we played East, we played our best and looked good," said senior Jennifer Rogers.

Hard work and lots of effort went into the making of this team. White said they worked quite a bit on passing and hitting drills, which were their weak spots.

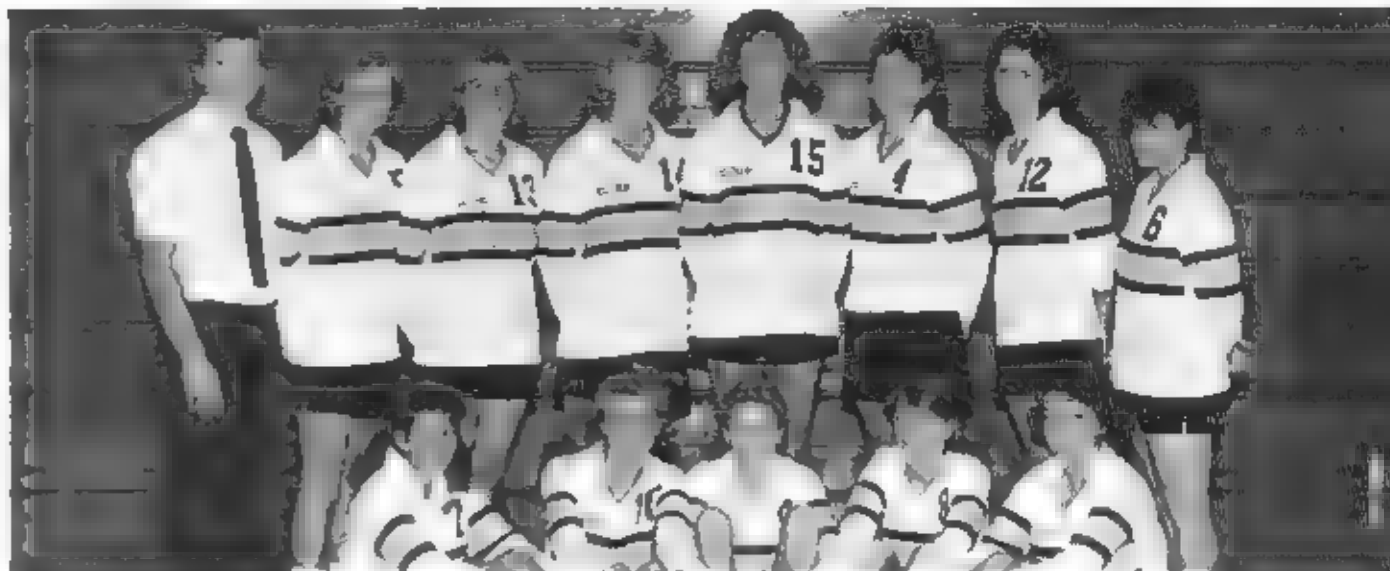

The coach who led the team during all those practices and games was Randy Schlueter.

"He is a good coach, even though our record didn't show it. He did a lot of switching around to find the best possible rotation for our team," said Rogers.

The team also received leadership from the team captain, Kussatz. She said that she would help the team out on the court, and psych them up before each game.

"Our record wasn't that great, but I think we really improved over the season," said Kussatz.

Volleyball, JV and sophomore Valuable experience gained

"Our main goal is to work together as a team and play as a team," said junior Monica Maguire. For the sophomore and reserve volleyball players and coaches, playing as a team was high on the list of priorities for the season.

"Communication and being consistent are important," said junior Melissa Becker, "we have to work together if we want to do well during the season and in the tournaments."

These qualities paid off in the city tournaments where the sophomores placed first and the reserves placed second at their level.

The theme for the sophomore team was "WOW 'em", which stands for "Working On Winning".

"The 'Winning' stood for a personal goal of each girl, such as passing or serving," said Jane Edwards, sophomore coach.

Doing well meant putting in a lot of practice time. The team had a two-hour practice twice a day from August 18 until school started. During their season, practice was every day after school until around 6 p.m.

Basic skills, such as passing, setting, hitting, serving, and blocking were worked on during practice time.

"A couple of our strong points are our blocking team and our hustling team," said Marsha Beauchamp, assistant coach.

"Team cohesiveness is vital. We get along very well and I have a lot of fun," said Beauchamp, "we are a little family."

"I think the highlight of the season is seeing 12 individuals come together as a team," said Edwards. "Sophomore volleyball gives girls a chance to be exposed to volleyball at a high school level."

Football, varsity Fired-up grididders take districts

A district championship gave the varsity football team a berth in the State playoffs for the third year in a row after a slow start at the beginning of the season.

The Knights, starting out 1-2 with losses to East and Grand Island, met their goals to become district champs, city co-champs, and conference runners-up with their final 7-3 record.

"We were in a hole at the start of the season but we pulled out of that," said junior Cory Catterson.

According to the head coach, Chuck Mizerski, consistency was an important factor. Working together and being consistent helped the Knights defeat Fremont 10-7. The Tigers had previously been undefeated and ranked number one.

"That was definitely our best game," said senior Mike Renn. "They were the number one team and they hadn't been beaten yet. Nobody gave us a chance to win, we had to prove ourselves."

Unfortunately, the Tigers avenged their loss by defeating Southeast 20-0 in the opening round of playoffs.

At seasons's end, Southeast had several players that won honors. Scott Hatfield, Allen Dodge, Neil Volker, Dean Sanford, Price Rivers, Tim Herman, Jon Mills, and Troy Bloebaum were named to the all-city team, with Cory Catterson and Marcus Rowe receiving honorable mention.

Mills was named to the Omaha World-Herald All-State second team, while Rivers and Catterson received honorable mention.

Herman made the Super-State team and was named Outstanding Defensive Player of the Year by both the World-Herald and the Lincoln Journal-Star.

Football JV and sophomore Frequent motivation spurs teams

"If you aren't a team, you aren't going to get anything accomplished," said sophomore Brad Blumenstock. "Everybody's got to be pulling for each other. It's a team effort."

Teamwork was important to both the sophomore and reserve football teams.

The reserves ended the season with a record of seven victories and one loss. Their one loss was to Grand Island.

They did so well "because of team talent. The players played very well together," said Gene Thompson, assistant coach. "We didn't have any outstanding players they were all good players."

Another aspect that added to the team's success was the coaching. The coaches motivated the players before games. After the games, they would show players their mistakes and help them learn from them.

The teams practiced for an average of about two hours every day, six days a week. They worked on group offense and defense, scrimmaged, built up individual skills. The reserves usually practiced longer than the other football teams.

According to Blumenstock, practice was tough because the team had to work on a play over and over again until it was perfect.

Another tough thing about practice, said sophomore Eric Altgilbers, was the fact that there were so many practices to go to before the games.

The sophomores had a mixed season and finished with three wins and four losses.

Teamwork was a factor which didn't always seem to work out. "This year we have a lot of individuals," said coach Dan Hohensee. "Sometimes they're a team, but mostly, they're individuals."

Swimming. Boys' State champs drown Westside

Revenge! Southeast boys' swim team took revenge over Omaha Westside at this year's state meet.

According to their coach, Bill Flory, the last time Southeast took state was 10 years ago in 1977.

Although not all swimmers made it to the state meet, it took everybody to get there. Senior Ed Pallesen said the team was a lot more than just one person, and Flory said that his best swimmers were "basically the whole team."

Going into the state meet, senior J.B. Barr said he felt a little nervous and anxious because he thought the team had a good chance at winning the title. Pallesen said he was "extremely nervous" because it was a big deal to him personally, and if the team couldn't take state this year they probably never could do it.

A reason for this was because they "had a lot of really good swimmers in all four classes," Pallesen said.

Pallesen said his most memorable meet was the state meet. "I've been working for my senior year state meet for 11 years and it meant a lot to me personally," he said.

But it wasn't easy getting to State. It was important to win other meets. Flory said some important victories that Southeast had, before State, were against Westside, Omaha Burke, and Lincoln East. Winning those games boosted the team's confidence, Flory said.

Flory said he thought the season was great. He said he had a really good group of kids who were hard-working.

Barr and Flory agreed that the most memorable meet was the Westside dual. Barr's reasoning was that Southeast had a strong win over Westside, who had always been the top team.

Swimming Girls

State qualifiers take fourth place

Since beginning practice in November, the girls' swimming and diving teams showed consistent improvement and moved toward their goal of swimming fast at the conference and state meets.

"One of our goals was to make State," said senior diver Shannon Toalson.

In addition to team scoring, team members also had personal goals. "I wanted to improve on my time, set a school record, and qualify for the junior nationals," said senior swimmer Gail Nelson.

The common sacrifice and team spirit that came from working together was an important part of team unity, according to Toalson. This team spirit helped individuals excel in meets, she said.

"I was surprised," said Nelson, "because I didn't even think about us placing. We only had two relays, three divers and three swimmers that placed."

On the diving team, Toalson placed fourth, senior Stephanie Flanders placed eighth, sophomore Tina Pierson placed twelfth, and Laurie Hanwell, a freshman, placed fifteenth.

Other top winners were Steph Neid, who had two second places, the medley relay had sixth place, the free relay had fourth place, Nelson had seventh and eighth place and freshman Chandy Barr had second in the 500 and fourth in the 400.

"I was pleased with how I did," said Toalson.

"I was really pleased with how things went," said Coach Bill Flory, "placewise I was shooting for the top five."

Wrestling Winning streak builds team spirit

The wrestling team's goal of winning at least one dual match was easily met as the grapplers ended their season with an impressive 6-2 dual record in addition to sending seven wrestlers to State.

Seniors Mike Siemer, Jeff Fushia, Chad Lunders, Marcus Balters and Monte Nitchie, junior Frank Emsick, sophomore Brent Rardon, and freshman Kyle Emsick all qualified for the state meet. Frank Emsick got the farthest by placing fifth in his weight class.

"I wasn't surprised I made it to State, I've been there before," said Emsick, adding that "you can't just dwell on making it there, because you still have to wrestle."

Head coach Dick Caster said, "We were competitive, and we had a few close matches. I think we did a good job at State given where we were in our program."

Another high point of the season was the Lincoln High dual where the Knights won 33-27. Junior Steve Bussen broke a tie by pinning his opponent with only seconds left on the clock.

Caster attributed the successful season to "a good team concept and a pretty good dual team that had a lot of spirit and enthusiasm." Part of this spirit came as a result of Caster moving into his first year as head coach.

"We had more confidence that we would go into our match and win, as opposed to wondering how close we would come to winning," senior Mike Siemer said.

Caster said he hoped the season was a transition from not being a top contender to becoming a stronger team. "Before, we didn't get any recognition, but this year we surprised a lot of people," said Nitchie.

Basketball Boys Varsity

Boys advance to district finals

"We were puppies last year, but now we're dogs."

That is the statement Coach Dennie Puelz used to describe his varsity boys' basketball team. "We've had a successful season. Experience - that's why we've been more successful," he says.

The team finished the regular season with a record of 13 wins and six losses and finished in second place in the district.

The district tournament was "pretty exciting," said junior Mike Works. "We all felt that we should have gone farther but we were happy with beating East," he added.

The regular season started off with a loss to Beatrice. Puelz commented that he thought that game was the highlight of the season because he thought the team knew they were better than last year, but the mental aspect wasn't there for them. "Talk is good," he said, "but you've got to be a doer."

After that game the team settled in to do some winning. "Teamwise," said senior Matt List, "we never really got consistent. We were really erratic."

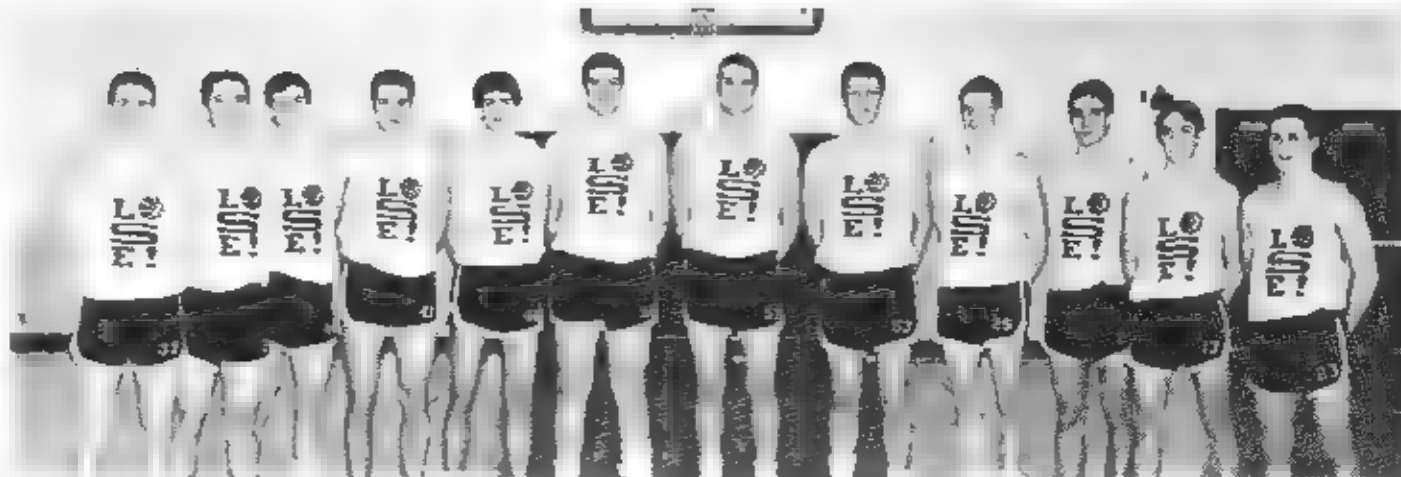

Works said the victory over Norfolk was probably their biggest regular season win. "They were ranked second in the state at that time and we played them at home."

It was through practice that strong points were developed. List said that these strong points were rebounding and defense.

Physical strength and aggressiveness were top on the list of strong points made by Puelz. "I think we're physically stronger than other teams. Our weightlifting program made a big difference," he said.

Experience was also a listed strength. "Our puppies," Puelz stated, "have come of age."

Basketball Boys Sophomore Boys face several challenges

"Jump up, move that ball down that court, we want two!" chanted the cheerleaders.

This was part of the atmosphere for the boys' junior varsity and the boys' sophomore basketball games.

One of the many highlights of the sophomore season was a basket made by Matt Lloyd who shot it from the Knights' free-throw line.

Without a doubt, the first game against East was the best game of the season for the sophomore team.

Sophomore Neil Volker said the team played the best together because they were the most excited about that game, since it was against East High.

The JV team members had separate views about which game was their best.

Junior Geoff Rownd said Beatrice was the best game because it was the first; the JV team started the season well.

Overall, the JV team, whose record was 7-9, "had its highs and lows," sophomore Scott Ash said.

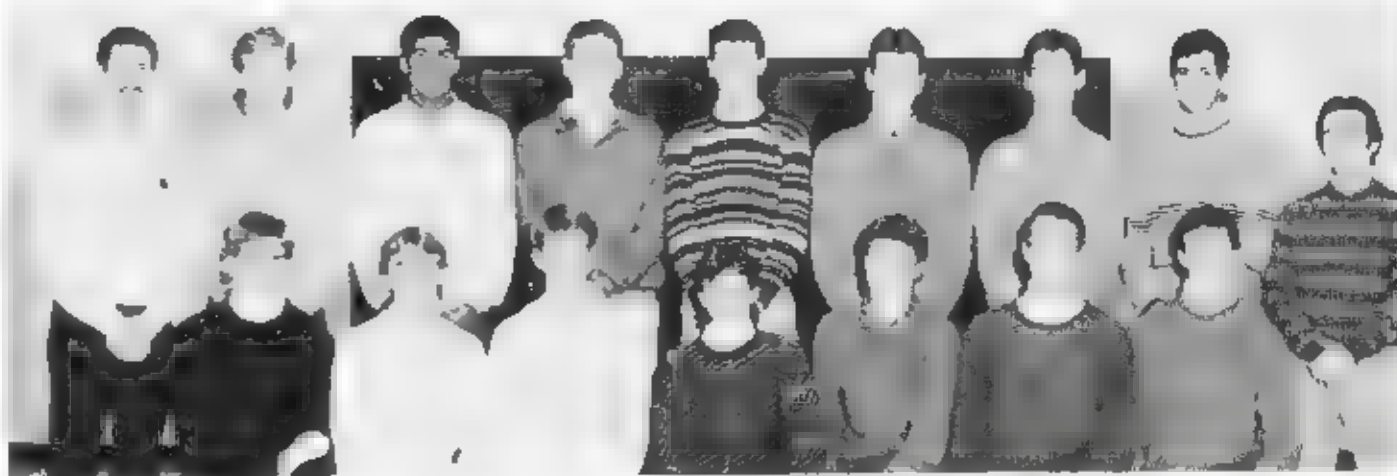

The coach's comment about the JV season was that the success of the team should be evaluated on more than the win-loss record.

"I hope the players learned what it takes to be on a successful team," coach J.R. Connell said.

"[The sophomore team] could've gone 12-0, but Coach Thompson got married," senior Brian Gordon said at a pep rally.

Even though they were 8-4 rather than 12-0, the team agreed they had a successful season.

Basketball Girls Varsity

Boost in spirit spurs girls on

The girls' varsity basketball team had to start from scratch. Not only did they lose last year's senior starters, but they lost their crucial height as well.

"Last year everyone expected us to have a good team, but this year people's expectations were different. They questioned our ability," said coach John Larsen.

Senior Angie Onouha said that in the pre-ratings their team was not only unrated, but they were not even listed as contenders.

"We wanted to prove we were good. We knew it and wanted others to know it too," said Onouha.

Larsen said that what their team lacked in height, they made up for in speed. He said they took advantage of their speed by pressing and using fast breaks against their opponents. This helped them against teams which did not run as much, said Larsen.

As the season went on, the ratings showed that their ability and extra effort paid off.

Onouha said that this ratings increase was a result of their defeating rated teams such as number-two Omaha Marion. She also gave Larsen the credit for their team's unexpected success.

"I think he's a great coach, probably the best in the state. He knows what he is doing," said Onouha.

The team had a couple of younger members added to their group - Sarah Carlson and Amy Fordham, both freshmen at Irving. Fordham was a starter consistently throughout the season.

In district play, the girls beat Northeast in the semifinals, but the defending state champs couldn't hold out against East High. It was a close battle, but in the end, top-ranked East pulled through and won the district finals.

Big wins improve overall season

Capturing the city title for the fourth straight year, the reserve girls' basketball team finished their successful season with a record of 14 wins and two losses.

Their two losses were both to Grand Island. In those games, "our refs sucked," explained junior Susan Brown. "We played good and stuff, but we kind of got the raw end of the deal both times."

Brown said she considered their biggest win to be the one over Omaha Marian. "We were just so psyched to beat them. They were undefeated. It was awesome. It was a major victory."

But the reserve girls had to do more than show up for the games to win. They practiced from two to two and a half hours every day. Junior Kim Thilges described them as "fun and short goof-off sessions."

"Sometimes it was discouraging that we had to have the South gym, especially when another team who didn't have a game got the Prasch," added junior Monica Maguire.

The sophomores also had an "excellent season", said sophomore Kathy Lewis.

The sophomores finished with a record of five wins and seven losses. Lewis emphasized that their record didn't show the individual and team improvement.

"In the middle of the season, everyone was working together. We had beaten Lincoln High, Northeast, Murdock Varsity, and we were psyching for East," said Lewis.

Sophomore Tina Hike explained their winning streak by saying, "We, in practice, learned a lot of things. Then, in the last four out of six games, we used them."

Full of Finance

Student jobs raise cash

How to make a living is a common concern for almost all people. For Southeast students were no exception. In the world of money, surprises were not hard to come by. From getting a raise to getting fired, from having more money than you thought to being overdrawn, from finding a quarter to losing a dollar bill, one could expect the unexpected.

The complex universe of high school finance could be broken down into two areas: where students got money and how they spent it. "If you can balance your income and expenses, you've got it made," reasoned junior Geoff Basler.

Income came from two sources: allowances and jobs. Senior Chad Moller's situation was typical. "My parents insure my survival. Beyond that, I'm on my own," he joked. To meet the expenses of his high culture tastes, Moller worked for one and a half years. "I worked at Four Star Drug - with its three convenient locations - for minimum wage. It was fairly fun, because some other Southeast kids worked there," he said.

Students' incomes usually came from allowances and jobs. Senior Chad Moller's situation was typical. "My parents insure my survival. Beyond that, I'm on my own," he joked.

To meet the expenses of his highly cultured tastes, Moller worked for one and a half years. "I worked at Four Star Drug - with its three convenient locations - for minimum wage," he said. "It was fairly fun, because some other Southeast kids worked there."

Basler made his financial killing by working in his father's office. "I had to work for 14 hours a day, 25 cents a shot; basically it was like a sweatshop," he said. "No, seriously, I cleaned up around the office and did odd jobs to earn my spending money."

Sophomore Kim Horacek said she relied on birthday present money to supplement her weekly allowance. During the summer, however, she babysat because she had more spare time.

"I did it about three times a week and got $30 a week," she said. "It was fun, because I like kids."

With cash in the coffers, the challenge turned to how to spend it. This was no problem for most.

Horacek said she spent most of her money on clothes. "A group of my friends will walk around and look into store windows. If we see something we like, we'll go in and buy it."

Moller was both a planned spender and an impulse buyer. "I buy records on a regular basis. But if I'm sitting around and have a 'Pizza Emergency,' then I'll spend all I've got. Ah, c'est la vie," he said.

Basler urged people not to give in to impulse or seductive advertising. "There are many people taken in by subliminal advertising who buy things they don't need or want. For instance, I once got this urge to go out and buy a full length evening gown, but that's another story," he said.

Caution and planning is important, Basler said. Moller agreed. "Comparative shopping is essential for responsible consumerism in this high-tech world we live in," he said.

Regardless of other factors, all students faced the common dilemma of getting money and parting with it.

Grant,
It's been really great getting to know you better this year, you are a great guy. Baseball will rock this summer with the Burgers, maybe we'll win some games SE wasn't that awesome of a season but it wasn't all that bad, was it? You're going to have to do some more things with us "Grannies" this summer before you leave for Mizzou. Then was great we'll have to have another some time for all times sake. You'll have to go corn squeen with Disco, Chad a, Jay-ball DC and me sometime, it's a blast. Give me a call this summer and we'll go out and have some fun, 483-1910, Can't wait for winter to start, Damn Buss will Rock

Colophon

The 1275 copies of the 1987 Shield yearbook were printed on 80-pound grade A enamel paper by Walsworth Publishing Company of Marceline, Missouri. Mike Diffenderfer was the Walsworth sales representative.

The book price ranged from 15 to 20 dollars each. The price included the 212-page book with an eight-page gatefold, a 24-page supplement, and the Clarion Classic, a creative arts magazine.

The 150 pt. board laminated cover with four-color pictures was designed by Ed Pallesen and Andrea Alit to portray the theme "Full of Knight Surprises." The original theme idea came from Carrie Richardson.

The copy was set by the yearbook staff using Rosewriter, an Apple program designed by Terry Rose, a former East High student. The computer disc was played out in the graphics department of the Lincoln Public Schools Building. Shield staffers set the copy for the Clubs section, the senior summaries and the spring supplement using a Macintosh Plus computer with Microsoft Word; the copy was printed, camera-ready, on an Apple LaserWriter.

Copy for the theme, divider, and closing pages was set in Chelmsford type, with headlines in Chelmsford and Le Griffé types. Copy in the Student Life section was set in Serif Gothic type, the People section in Avant Garde, Academics in Garamond, Sports in Univers, and the Mini-Mag in Fredricka and American Type Medium. The copy printed with the LaserWriter was set primarily in Helvetica and Times, with a few items set in novelty types.

Layouts for the Student Life section were done in three-plus-column, Sports in four-column, People in two-column, Clubs in three-column, Academics in five-column, and the Mini-Mag in a freestyle layout.

Using a fresh approach to portray the lives of Southeast students, the Mini-Mag was printed on an eight-page gatefold.

The book was completed in six segments, the first of which included all of the color pages and the cover. All events after the final March 16 deadline were covered in the spring supplement.

Four-color processing was used on the first 16 pages of the book and the

National/International Issues 1986-87

Though oftentimes Southeast students' most pressing concerns were beating East in basketball or studying for upcoming tests, other events of a broader scope were also of general interest to students. Undeniably, national and international news events were important and impacted the lives of high school students everywhere.

On the domestic front, one of the most significant events politically involved the Iran-Contra arms scandal. In November, a Syrian magazine revealed that the U.S. had, in direct contradiction of its stated policy, shipped arms to Iran, apparently in the hope of winning the release of American hostages in the Mid-East. Subsequent investigations revealed that, through the efforts of National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver North and others, profits from the sale were diverted to the U.S.-backed "Contras" fighting to overthrow the Nicaraguan government. The affair's political significance lay in the threat it posed to Ronald Reagan's popularity, which suffered a blow when the Democrats wrested control of the U.S. Senate from the Republicans.

Close to the pocketbooks of Lincoln families was the historic tax reform act passed by Congress. The act simplified the tax structure and eliminated many of the deductions which characterized the previous tax system.

Also on the financial end of the spectrum was the insider-trading scandal, which rocked Wall Street. Among those implicated was stockbroker Ivan "The Terrible" Boesky. New York was also the scene of the biggest mafia trial in the history of organized crime. Leaders from all five families of the New York mob were convicted as part of a national crackdown on organized crime.

The national emphasis on public health reached Lincoln in two forms: the crusade against drug abuse and the concern over Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS). In school, the SCIP program was implemented to wean drug users of their habit. Health classes and other groups brought the idea of AIDS-education and prevention into Southeast's consciousness.

Internationally, U.S.-Soviet relations continued to dominate news. As Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev instituted reform measures in his own country, he and Ronald Reagan met in Reykjavik, Iceland and almost reached a historic arms reduction pact. The sole stumbling block was apparently the inability to agree upon Reagan's proposal for SDI, a space-based nuclear defense.

The U.S.S.R. was the scene for one of the worst nuclear tragedies in 50 years, when a nuclear reactor at Chernobyl exploded spewing radiation into the air endangering the health of countless Europeans.

Amid continued terrorism and regional fighting, there were also happy moments in the world. One of the most festive revolved around the wedding of Britains Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson. Americans gave a giant salute to Dennis Conner and the crew of the yacht "Stars and Stripes" for recapturing the America's Cup.

Inevitably, there were deaths. The most stirring death from Nebraska's perspective came in March when U.S. Senator Edward Zorinsky suffered a fatal heart attack. Others who died included actors James Cagney, Danny Kaye and Cary Grant, and artists Andy Warhol and Georgia O'Keefe.

Whether we recognized their importance or not, news events had a way of shaping our lives. Be it obvious or subtle, our lives were different due to the consequences of actions in Moscow, Tripoli, and Washington, D.C. Understanding them became a challenge of worldly proportions.

AMERICAN EDUCATION

The controversial ABC miniseries "Amerika", which portrayed a Soviet takeover of the U.S., was filmed outside of Lincoln and involved some Southeast students. Here, Citizenship Issues students listen, via radio, to the "Amerika" producer discuss its creation and the associated issues.

GIVE BLOOD

Southeast students helped in the Red Cross blood drive in February. Giving blood became a controversial issue across the country because of the spread of AIDS.

DIABETES DIALOGUE

Allison Smith, co-star of CBS-TV series "Kate and Allie", appeared in Lincoln to discuss Diabetes at a press conference for teenagers. Juvenile Diabetes continued to be a threat to teenagers nationwide.

RUN, JESSE, RUN

Black leader and former presidential candidate Jesse Jackson visited Lincoln and spoke to these high school students. Throughout 1986-87, Jackson maintained his visibility in racially conflictive areas, such as Forsyth County, Georgia and White Plains, New York.

Surprising to the end, but...

The period from September 1986 to June 1987 will be remembered in different ways by many different people. For the 1500 people that attended Southeast during that time, as well as the others associated with or interested in the school, it meant a year of true excellence; excellence that exceeded most expectations.

Though academic, athletic and personal excellence was an accepted part of life at Southeast, the specific achievements described on the preceding pages of this book were surprising both in their consistency and their high level of quality.

By striving to perfect an activity - be it running distance, acting in a play, tuning a car, working a mathematic equation or simply enjoying oneself, Southeast students came up with some pleasantly successful results.

What the school community as a whole did so well was to encourage personal excellence. Teachers challenged us to do our best academically, coaches prodded us to fulfill our physical potential, friends helped us to be the most sincere, understanding, and fun people we could be.

Furthermore, Southeast's excellence transcended statistics and awards. For its size and age, the school had an amazing number of success stories. This year was truly one of the best in this regard; this book attests to it.

But statistics and awards are not the only, nor necessarily the best, criteria on which to judge a school. Walking down the halls of some schools, one could see people who, for lack of a supportive environment, were sad, lonely or frustrated. Undeniably, there were people with those problems at Southeast. Their number, however, was surprisingly low, and if they were discovered, there were a multitude of groups eager to help them. Friends, counselors, caring teachers, clubs, and occasionally the SCIP program were available at all times to all students. As a result, the halls of Southeast were noticeably happy places.

All this is not to deny that some unpleasant and sorrowful surprises did occur. City-wide teen stress continued to rise. According to a study in the Lincoln Star, 31 percent of Lincoln teens led a life categorized as "risky or hazardous".

Southeast specifically was not immune to tragedy. Senior-to-be Mike Hansen was killed in an auto accident shortly before school began. Sophomore Dylan Gushard and his brother, former student Brandon Gushard, were killed by their father in a family tragedy.

Such times of pain oftentimes made us more acutely aware of the usual good fortune we enjoyed. They also focused our attention on the prevention of repeat tragedies. A new awareness of seat belts came from Hansen's death and an awareness of stress and mental illness came from the Gushards' deaths. Our ability to pull together during trying times reflected our common strength.

SUPER COACH

Varsity girls' basketball coach John Larsen received the Lincoln Journal-Star "Coach of the Year" award for 1985-1986 at a varsity boys' game. Larsen led the girls to a 16-4 record this year.

The Southeast Court Choir, who took first at the city vocal contest, perform on Nebraska ETV. Southeast enjoyed exceptional success with its music program this year.

DISMISSED

After graduation, the halls and rooms of Southeast stand empty. Over the summer, juniors and sophomores had new experiences and prepared to return, while seniors went out and "tackled life"

SPIC N' SPAN

After being vandalized with blue spray paint last year, the knight in the front hall was restored by Student Council. This year's council removed the paint and purchased a new sword to replace the stolen one.

Consistently at the top

During the happy times or during the sad ones, Southeast students always strived to meet their potential. That much has been true year-in and year-out. What set this year apart was the sheer quantity and quality of the awards we received and the presence of many less tangible accomplishments. In those respects, this year was full of Knight surprises.

NUMBER ONE
The boys' swimming team crushed the defending champs, Omaha Westside, to win the state swimming title. In doing so, the Knights ended Westside's nine-year championship string.

G.K. - We'll our Senior year rocked like everybody said! C.I. w hellish and s was your project and your body!
Good Luck
this summer and may many

Just say it

I'm not going to say it... That's right, I'm not going to say all that B.S.

If anyone to say that I think like the one of the best people it know as far I know around! You are always being better making original, making me smile and feeling good. I thank - you for all to me special. I like about people in life - have made me see it in a diff.

light. You know's completely and right. You said I love most of it. Remember

I am sincere when I say these things plus this: Don't hesitate to drop me a post card letting me in on the great times in your life - It is not mean so much not to be stronger when we come back for our 20th reunion.

Grant,

You're a cool guy, and I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that you're a cool guy. I know that Grant, almost over! We're gone to school years together for years never years. I would back in the days of that back of basketball playing football & basketball. I the grounds a future S.E. Star.

playing with a college pleasure stud!! I've been in cover ya. Good luck for steroid see it will be use.
Bad anyway, good luck!

pass + to our p. from

I think I do some to have a summer
I'm this a little mad hang out with all a lot of fun with chill. I gave me you... I still love
I did fuck
you're a person
Grant- you're
I'll. Just a joke.
start thing live!!
get together!!
I'll. Just a joke.
start thing live!!
get together!!

Grant,
We enjoyed having you in class. You helped add spice to last period. Good luck and please endeavor to be very successful!

Where do I even begin? We've sure been through a lot this year, huh? Luckily, through it all we've remained friends, and I'm really glad of that 'cuz I think you're really special! It's really sad to think about you going off to college -- I really miss you a lot so KEEP IN TOUCH!! I wish you all the luck in the world in whatever you do. Who knows -- maybe some day my little boy will be collecting Baseball cards with "Grant Kauffman" on them!

Well, you were definitely one of the highlights of my senior year & I'll have a lot of memories I'll never forget!" I ♥ U!!

Hey sexy! Grant's creative thinking been fun? huh? come on, it has! It was for me because I was exposed to your fantastic sense of humor! That's a real talent, you such a card!! I'm happy we had this class together, but it's kind of sad - we just become lovers, I mean friends BOOM, it's over!

Take care of yourself. Have fun - this summer
♥ ~~Kate~~ Mari Luther

I can hardly believe it!
I think back to all that we have been through & can hardly believe it!!
Remember Guinan's class baby pictures & the Big Cheese?
And now we're seniors & even cooler & there are the Silver Bullets to deal with!!! Our senior year ~~has~~ has been rather strange together to say the least, but whatever happened, I know (I think) that I have a very special friend who is awesome at baseball! - No I am not talking about you - well ok so I am and you also have to know I think extremely highly of you & would love if we could keep in touch!
Who knows what will happen in life?!! I also love you anyone who goes to singles is great! Well, I wish you luck year, I'm sure you'll love change from high school!! Oh

quite a coincidence - sp?! Well, I love you & let's hang out this summer!! See ya, cherise SENIORS ARE COOL!!

GRANT -
You're such a
CUTIE! (u) <sup>Relationship</sup>
You always made me laugh
I hope a guy like you is around! See you summer ya

GRANT

I can't believe it. we're freshmen in college.
It's unbelievable. I will now run through some highlights of our life together.

- Varsity football at SE
- cheese sandwiches at your house
- HBO at your house - Mr Goodbar
- Playing Bats ball against each other
- just plain playing at your old house
- over-nights
- the "Haunted Forest" with Ed P.
- NV basketball & football games (WTT)
- Sheridan
- Mrs. Sellenberg's class
- parties to the film
- death traps
- Dr. Crandall's office
- Mallach's brother
- football & soccer on playground
- Talent show

Grant,
You're a stud &
I'm anxious to play ball with you this summer!

- Invaders soccer - playing Rookrunners!!
- 8th grade English
- 12th grade Vocab with Vince
- Barry + Zed
- Little chick ball - you + me SS + BB in T-ball

God and that's only what I can come up with in 5 minutes. I'm remembering lots more now that I didn't put down. Grant, you're my first best friend and even though we haven't hung out as much lately, you're still a great friend. I can't believe you're not going to be a Hustler but we've got to get together at NV-MV games, no doubt. Good luck at MIZZOU I wish I was going there too. But at least NV will win at basketball even though the Tigers will kill us in football.
I love you forever

TIMMY SIE

call me collect, maybe I'll accept

Grant,
you got lost
The Whimper
Shanks for living such a great friend.

Keep in touch when you come home from Missouri.
Let's spend some time together
this summer.
Love ya man.

Gr (Micaela)
(The Whimper)

Grant -
What can I say? hummm...
Well you just the greatest! - I wish you the best luck with what ever you do after your last day here! And have a great trip to see ya! Love ya!
Kallei

Grant. body toning has been so much fun.
I'm really glad we got 40. be friends this semester. You're a really nice guy &
I wish you the best of luck always. Hope to see you this summer, maybe with Troy. as Anyway good luck

Grant - its greens yellow

Grant, well, I have to say it was a privilege to get to know you during baseball. Summer baseball will be even better after the games will have to go into a hole. I think you should walk on at Missouri. We will have to pick up a lot of women together this summer. Lemon candy

How's the helmet? I never see you anymore, I miss that. You're a really awesome guy. Your sexy skin, and you love Genesis. (You've got it all.) I'll never forget you're trying to make me smile 90% of the time and I hope that I maybe once made you smile to. Have yourself a wonderful life - Maintain - Gracy

Forgetting steps 2, 3, and 4. Keep in touch w/ me, the HAVE remember you're afraid to tell you that because I don't want you to think I'm just said. Gracy

CORONA + SHIT HAPPEN

Something else - Come say goodbye to me before you leave Missouri - Not mean alot

Grant! Fuck off, this space is mine. Well, buddy boy ole friend of mine, how the hell have we survived these last 3 years? Lots of beer, maybe? Whoa, could be... Yes, maybe it could be. Drink buddies these next 5 years and get lots of the best pussy in Jocktelle. Photo of Scottie
I'm the best You are the player in the world. But I'm the best basketball player in the world. I'm probably in the world because I'm Jordan. Thanks for being a senior to a Sophomore. I could see you later. Sighears

You

from your secret admirer

Want to - well what to say? Only 4 days left! Then we won't ever be able to tell each other how sexy we both are!! But we'll have to keep in touch - since we live pretty close! Boy didn't we learn alot in relationships - at least we both know how to deal with death!! (Funeral home!! he he) And we both know that we have an extreme passion to have wild uninhibited sex as soon as possible!! Thanks for being a friend - you always make me laugh. I hope your life turns out great -> pro-baseball player!! Keep in touch - 423-6443 - we'll go out & laugh - (Or maybe not!!!!) Love ya! <3 Kim (h.) Johnson
P.S. YOU'RE NOT A BANANA - I Hope!! (Don't forget that joke! - only me & you know who I'm talking about!!)

GK

The THON really sucked and it wasn't worth it. Or maybe it was! who knows? Too bad we didn't get to play against you bullets. OK we couldn't have beat you guys 123 - 0! Of course I'm losing my life on an intramural game! Hey, gimme a call 488-1607, we'll get together.

G-

What would it be like to be a secret admirer. And thanks for letting me sign your yearbook. I don't have a pen for you. I'll try to find a pen for you if I can. I'll try to find a pen for you if I can. I'll try to find a pen for you if I can.
